We know that many readers of the Farmers' Review are well posted on this question, and that they are using their brains and their pencils to advantage. But we also take it for granted that of the thousands of recent subscribers to this paper there are some that have not yet carefully weighed the matter. Hence these remarks.

The Coming Poultry Show.

As many of our readers will attend the exhibition that will be made by the National Fanciers' and Breeders' Association in Chicago January 20-25, next, and as some of them will consign birds and other stock, we know they will be glad to see the portraits, which we present herewith, of the men who will manage this great show, viz.: the president, secretary and board of directors. The growth in interest and importance of this exhibition is indicated by the fact that $200 was the fund subscribed and deemed necessary for the first show, while at the last and fifth exhibition $12,892 was paid for premiums and other expenses, and the Coliseum, the largest structure of its kind in America, was hardly large enough to hold the exhibits and the throngs of people who attended.

The judges thus far appointed by the management are:

Mr. W. S. Russell, Ottumwa, Ia.
Rev. E. W. Rankin, Cedarville, Ill.
Mr. M. F. Wurst, East Cleveland, O.
Mr. A. B. Shaner, Lanark, Ill.
Mr. Thomas F. Rigg, Iowa Falls, Ia.
Mr. Frank W. McKenzie, Concord, Mich.
Mr. D. T. Heimlich, Jacksonville, Ill.
Mr. Chas. McClave, New London, O.
Mr. William E. Knight, Fishkill Landing, N. Y.
Mr. R. F. Jones, Flat Rock, Ind.
Mr. E. J. W. Dietz, Downer's Grove, Ill.
Mr. D. A. Stoner, Rensselaer, Ind.
Mr. L. W. Schimmel, Detroit, Mich.
Mr. Henry Tiemann, Baltimore, Md.
Mr. Robert Joss, Peoria, Ill.

Pigeons, dogs, cats and pet stock will be judged by the comparison method.

In the poultry and Belgian hare departments the method of judging will be decided by the exhibitors, as per the following rules, adopted by the board of directors:

"The entry blanks prepared for exhibitors shall contain a column, marked 'Method of Judging.' Exhibitors shall be requested to indicate, in such column, for each specimen, the method by which the exhibitor desires such specimen shall be judged. As soon as the entries are closed, the secretary shall examine the entry sheets and ascertain therefrom the wishes of the exhibitors in each variety; and each variety shall then be judged by the method desired for the largest number of specimens in each variety. If in any variety there shall be a tie, or if all the exhibitors in the variety shall fail to indicate the method by which they wish the specimen in the variety judged, then the committee on judges shall determine the method by which such variety shall be judged."

For premium list, address the secretary, Fred L. Kinney, Morgan Park, Ill.

Poultry Briefs.

The open scratching shed during winter is probably better suited to the fowls than is the closed scratching shed. By means of this shed the fowls are induced to exercise in the open air, and the temperature to which the fowls are exposed is more even for the day and night. When the birds are kept in a well glazed house night and day, the temperature to which they are exposed is very uneven. At night the thermometer goes down to say the freezing point. The hens are on the roosts and are gaining no warmth through exercise. The next day the sun warms up the house to perhaps 60 degrees and the fowls further warm themselves up by scratching. Too great variation results.

We have made great progress in breeding birds and at the same time we have made little progress. Our great progress has been in the line of developing the markings of breeds and producing fowls that scored high. Our little progress has been along the line of real utility. A utility bird, for eggs or meat, would not be a high scoring bird. One of the correspondents of the Farmers' Review asserts that egg-laying spoils the form of a pullet for showing. If we want to get hens that will lay more eggs we will have to pay less attention to form and plumage and more to the real performance. In the past we have done what was easiest—we have moved toward the point of least resistance. We must now attempt greater things, with more labor.

At the Utah Agricultural College they have been looking after the utility end of breeding. They have been using the trap nest. One brood of chicks was matured and given a year's test with these nests. One pullet laid less than 100 eggs during the year, and one pullet laid 210 eggs. That was doing better than the books require, as 200 eggs per year is the largest number supposed to be laid by the hens of any breed. With such means of finding out the good and poor hens, the latter may be killed off till only the profitable ones remain. The ordinary farm flock contains a few excellent layers but a good many that do not pay the cost of keeping them.

Gains in Sheep Feeding.

In studying the results of some feeding experiments carried on at the station we find that the largest gains are not necessarily the cheapest, nor are the smallest gains necessarily the most expensive. We find by observation that the best and the cheapest gains are made in feeding the sheep up to near its full capacity, after it has become accustomed to its diet. Over feeding is always accompanied by loss. The heaviest feeding should be done during the last four or six weeks of the feeding period.—South Dakota Station Bulletin.

Growing Potatoes in Illinois.

From the Farmers' Review: In this county (Champaign) potatoes are no more profitable to grow than corn, and not one farmer in one hundred grows potatoes for market. To get the best results with potatoes it is necessary that the soil be rich. Deep fall plowing gives the best results here. The planting should be done as early in the spring as possible. The after culture must be very thorough. I would rather grow potatoes than corn.—L. S. Spencer, Champaign County, Illinois.

The Canadians are progressing rapidly in the development of their dairy industry. Ontario especially is making great strides in advance. Already more than 350 creameries are in operation, with patrons numbering nearly 23,000. The hauling of the milk alone costs more than $1,000,000 annually. The patrons receive yearly over $12,000,000 for their milk.

Decreasing Supply of Fine Wools.

United States Consul Atwell, located at Roubaix, France, quotes Henry Pupin as to the increasing demand for fine wools and the decreasing supply as follows:

Now, more than ever, the line is drawn between the two kinds, so different in their origin, in mode of manufacture, and final use. The dominant note in the history of wool has been the using demand, during a period of three consecutive years, for fine grades, in face of steadily decreasing production. The reasons for this decrease have long been known. After the low prices paid in 1894 and 1895, stock growers limited their production of fine grades, and gave attention to common breeds, which were more remunerative. Cheviots at that date being in as great demand as merinos, they found greater advantage in raising breeds that served as food, were more hardy and more prolific. Since then, if the flocks did not increase in numbers, the yield in fine wool necessarily became less, as the Merino sheep gives birth to but one lamb yearly, while the cross-breeds produce two during the same period. This explains the dearth of fine wools to-day; the taste for fine grades seems so firmly established that only the best cross-bred wools find a market. It is not likely that there will be a great increase in Merino sheep in the near future, as at least eight years of crossing the breed are necessary to re-establish the Merino type.

Under existing conditions and with present prospects there are not many ways out of the difficulty. The dying out of Merino sheep without any attempt to replace them, and the consequent decrease in fine wools will necessarily increase the demands for high grades until impossible prices will turn popular attention to common grades, for which there is no call at present.

The Improvement in Horses.

From Farmers' Review: In southeastern Illinois our horses are steadily improving in individuality and size, yet the improvement is not what it should be. We should have at least half a dozen fine salable horses in every locality. Here in this particular locality fairly good to fine sires are to be seen, all of them of such individuality and breeding as to warrant the expectation of good results in the direction of the material improvement of our horses. The greatest obstacle to a more rapid improvement lies with our farmers, many of whom persist in breeding mares that possess neither good blood, size, action nor conformation. The result of such breeding usually brings disappointment and loss to such breeders. The demand in our markets for good horses is stronger than ever before, especially for good animals of the roadsters, coach or draft types. These are horses that every farmer can produce, but not from their poorly bred, under-sized, misshapen mares. In order to produce the sort of animals our market demands, farmers should secure good mares, free from hereditary defects, handsome, well bred and of kind disposition. These should be bred to the best sires obtainable. There is neither profit nor credit in raising the kind of horses no man wants.—John Landrigan, Edwards County, Illinois.

The World's Butter Record Broken.

From Farmers' Review: From December 17th to December 23rd, inclusive, seven days, the Holstein-Friesian cow Mercedes Julip's Pietertje 39480 produced 480 pounds of milk, containing 23.4857 pounds butter fat, equivalent to 29 pounds 5.7 ounces butter, 80 per cent fat, or 27 pounds 6.4 ounces 85.7 per cent fat. This record was made at the Minnesota Experiment Station under the direction of Professor T. L. Haecker. The last three days of the test the cow was under supervision day and night of two representatives of that station. The product during these three days was 10.5622 pounds fat. The largest product for one day was 3.7634 pounds and was made when under constant watch, on the sixth day of the test. The average per cent of fat during the week was 4.02 per cent; during the three days under constant watch-care it was 4.21 per cent.—S. Hoxie, Supt. H. F. Ad. Reg.

Food Eaten by Sheep and Cattle.

It is sometimes asserted that cattle and sheep require the same amount of feed per thousand pounds of live weight. This statement seems not to be well founded. In some experiments at the Iowa station the cattle consumed 19.6 pounds of dry matter per thousand pounds of live weight, against an average of 29.07 by the sheep. Both sheep and cattle were on full feed. The sheep made a daily gain of 3.73 pounds per thousand pounds of live weight, and the cattle 2.14. In summing up this comparison, we find that while the sheep ate 48 per cent more than the cattle, they also gained nearly 75 per cent more.—Prof. C. F. Curtiss.

Meanness in Bulls.

From Farmers' Review: I believe that meanness in a bull is hereditary and would not breed to one. Several years ago, when a boy, we bred to an imported bull that got cross, and his produce showed it as far as the third generation, but, of course, only occasionally. I have only had one young bull get mean, and we sold him at once for bologna. I think that bulls are often spoiled by teasing and also by careless handling, and by one that is afraid. They soon know when one is afraid of them and they will then take advantage of that fact.—Ira Cottingham.

Gold Counterfeiting.

The gold used in color printing and on mirror and picture frames is only an imitation. It is made from bronze and spelter, and not from the pure gold leaf. There is another article also very much imitated, and that is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the celebrated family remedy for indigestion, dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness, and liver and kidney troubles. Beware of counterfeits when buying. The genuine must have our Private Stamp over the neck of the bottle.

Dream of Boyhood Days.

"The dream of my boyhood days," observed J. Pierpont Morgan to a friend, recently, "was to be a farmer, and have the finest stock in the world—the dolce far niente of the farmer's life was my farm."

"Well, you have your farm and your stock—to say nothing of stocks," retorted the friend.

"Well, but I am the man of all work, and haven't got the dolce far niente; and I can't buy it, either, as big a price as I might be willing to pay for it."—New York Times.

The Dog Governess.

The lowest rung in the industrial ladder would seem to have been reached when a woman of education and refinement hires her services by the hour in the interests of "my lady's dog." "Dog governesses" is the title given to a woman who calls daily at certain houses of wealth, and, for a consideration, takes the dog or dogs for a constitutional in the park. She also oversees the animals' bath, and attends to every detail of the canine wardrobe. Is there not the fall, winter and spring overcoat, the ear muffers, not to forget the burnishing of his dogship's collar?—New York Times.

Novelties in Fans.

A novelty in fans, which has come from Paris, is composed of blue jay and white gull plumes, with a pearl mount. These feather fans are carried out in all kinds of plumage, pheasant, peacock, jungle cock and merle, mounted with pearl handles, inlaid with gold. The gull fans with pearl mounts are singularly pretty. Another pretty novelty is made up of different flowers shaped out of stiffened gauze. These are painted in natural hues, the centers glittering with spangles. Poppies, pansies, carnations and Marguerites, treated in this way and mounted on carved ivory sticks make an exceedingly effective fan.—Brooklyn Eagle.

VOL. XIX. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN. THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1902. NUMBER 5

PAID A FINE.

William Seiler Violated a City Ordinance.

William Seiler was found guilty Monday afternoon by a jury composed of twelve good and true men of visiting a house of ill fame, and Judge Tarrant assessed him a fine of $25 and costs, or a total of over $66 which he paid.

Seiler was arrested in Crookston last week by Sheriff Sampson and brought here on Saturday. He empolyed Richardson & Mabey as attorneys and demanded a jury trial, which consumed all day of Monday. City Attorney McIntyre prosecuted in an able manner and was assisted by Attorney Lee.

The evidence was so strong that the jury found the man guilty upon the first ballot.

The general opinion about town is that Seiler should have received more severe punishment, but under the circumstances this could not be accomplished. He was married less than a year ago to a widow, who had $4,000 in cash and of this amount it is said that he has spent $3,500 in riotous living. Mrs. Seiler has commenced an action for divorce.

Select Crookston

Crookston has been chosen as the place of meeting of the next convention of the state banker's association which will take place in July. The convention was secured for Crookston largely through the efforts of A. D. Stephens of the Merchant National bank, Minneapolis, being Crookston's competitor. At [illegible] executive committee of the association held in Minneapolis Monday the vote was a tie between Crookston and Minneapolis, and it was decided to leave the matter to the absent members. There are fifteen members of the committee, and the eighth vote for Crookston was received only last Saturday.

BODY CRUSHED.

Nels Johnson Killed Last Thursday.

Nels Johnson, a resident of St. Hilaire, and an employe of the St. Hilaire Lumber company, was accidentally killed last Thursday.

The St. Hilaire Lumber company is driving piling at points along the river and while at work two miles north of that place the accident occurred. The workmen were engaged in raising the pile driver after removing it to the new location, and Johnson was standing at one end with his back against a tree. When the machine was raised to quite an angle it slipped and Johnson was pinned against the tree.

His body was badly mangled, his chest being crushed in, and he lived but an hour after the accident.

He leaves a wife and small children and carried insurance to the amount of $3,000.

The funeral services were held at St. Hilaire Tuesday afternoon the Rev. I. T. Aastad, of this city conducting the service, which were held in the Synode church of which the deceased had been a member. The church was beautifully decorated with cut flowers, purchased by the Ladies' Aid, and the services were very impressive.

The Peavey Elevator company, of Minneapolis, estimates that from 30 to 35 per cent of last years northwestern wheat crop is still in the hands of the farmers. This estimate is based upon the reports from country agents. On the basis of a crop of 210,000,000 bushels, there would still be 69,000,000 bushels to be marketed.

A. J. McRae, who for years has made his regular trips to Thief River Falls representing the Twohy Mercantile Co., of west Superior, has been promoted and will now remain in the offices. M. R. Bright is the name of his successor on the road.

No License Required to Embalm and Ship Dead Bodies in Minnesota.

Minnesota State Board of Health, at its meeting July 9th, 1902, took action as follows relative to the regulations governing the transportation of the dead

Whereas: Certain rules governing the transportation of the dead have been adopted by the Conference of State and Provincial Boards of Health, by the General Baggage Agents' Association of America and by the National Funeral Directors Association.

Whereas: There rules were adopted by these various associations in 1897, thus having allowed ample time for their general adoption, either through the action of state boards of health or of legislation.

Whereas: These rules are for the general protection of the public against communicable diseases; as also to prevent the existence of a of a nuisance, due to the decomposition of imperfectly prepared remains while in transit; therefore be it.

Resolved; That after January 1st, 1902, the shipment of remains into or from the State of Minnesota must conform strictly to the aforesaid rules.

Resolved; That all non-licensed embalmers shipping remains into or from the State of Minnesota after January 1st, 1902, be required to furnish an affidavit to the railroad receiving the remains to the effect that the death of the individual was not due to a communicable disease and that the Minnesota regulations relating to the preparation of the remains of those that have not died of a communicable disease have been complied with; such affidavit to be forwarded at once by the receiving railroad to the Secretary of the Minnesota State Board of Health.

Resolved; That shipment of remains by non-licensed embalmers into or from the the State of Minnesota must always be made in hermetically sealed casket, unless said remains can reach their destination within thirty hours from the time of death of the individual;

Resolved; That a copy of these regulations be sent to the various state and provincial boards of health, the various railroad officials and the embalmers' journals throughout the county.

I trust you will use your utmost endeavors to see that these regulations are complied with.

H. M. BRACKEN.

Secretary and Executive Officer, Minn. State Board of Health.

HIS HONOR

Writes of His Success in the City of Washington.

C. L. Dobner has received the following letter from F. H. Kratka, dated at Washington Jan. 30:

"In company with Senator Clapp and Page Morris, I had a hearing with Indian Commissioner Jones for about one hour, and when we were through he advised Senator Clapp to draw up a paper and have it signed by the entire Minnesota delegation in place of our resolution. Then we went and had a hearing before Secretary Hitchcock and explained matters to him fully, and when I got through, the secretary turned to Mr. Clapp and said: "Senator you draw up a paper and present it to Commissioner Jones and I will act upon the matter, but I should like to take in the whole Red Lake reservation." Then I again called his attention that we did not want it in that shape, as by so doing it would involve a vital question that would take years to settle, and all we wanted was just this portion opened. "Very well," he says, "Senator you just draw up the paper and I will give it my personal attention.' I gave him some pamphlets and then we called on the president. We went right into his private office, where there were at least 15 people waiting for a hearing and the president was engaged with the governor of Kentucky. When he got through we were introduced. I will tell you what I think of him when I get home. Explained my mission and he was much interested. Tomorrow we will draw up the papers and I will send you a copy of the same which I myself will take to Secretary Hitchcock and then we will await his pleasure and ask him to send a commissioner with me to make a treaty. If I do not get this, then Senator Clapp will introduce a bill in the senate to open these land, and I think we stand a very good show."

CUT OFF WAR TAX

WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE UNANIMOUSLY AGREES ON THE PLAN.

EVERYTHING BUT MIXED FLOUR

AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY THE DEMOCRATS ARE TURNED DOWN.

TO TAKE EFFECT ON JULY 1, 1902.

REPEAL WILL EFFECT AN AGGREGATE REDUCTION OF $77,000,000.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The ways and means committee, by unanimous vote, yesterday instructed Chairman Payne to prepare a bill repealing all the war revenue taxes except the tax on mixed flour. The action taken was in the form of a resolution to the effect that the bill should provide for the repeal of the remaining war taxes, to take effect on July 1, 1902, except that the repeal of the duty on tea should go into effect Jan. 1, 1903. The only division in the committee was on amendments proposed by Democratic members. Representative Richardson of Tennessee proposed an amendment to put trust-made articles on the free list. This was defeated by a party vote, as was the amendment of Representative Robertson of Louisiana to continue the tax on "bucket shops." Representative Newlands of Nevada offered two amendments, one excepting from the repeal the tax on petroleum and sugar refineries, and another imposing a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent on the gross receipts of any industrial corporation having receipts of $1,000,000 annually. Both amendments were defeated by party votes.

Chairman Payne Explains.

Chairman Payne made the following statement on the proposed repeal:

"The treasury now has an available cash balance of something over $174,000,000. It is not likely that this will be increased materially during the present fiscal year as the treasury is buying bonds at a rate that will use up the surplus to accumulate between this and the end of the fiscal year, June 30 next. The secretary of the treasury's report estimated a surplus for this year of $100,000,000, and subsequent results seem to confirm this estimate. The committee, therefore, thought it was entirely safe to repeal the remainder of the war revenue taxes amounting to $68,000,000, and the tax on tea of $9,000,000, in the aggregate, $77,000,000, at this time. This will still leave a surplus estimated on this year's receipts and expenses of $22,000,000 or $23,000,000 for the year, while we will start upon the next fiscal year with $174,000,000 available cash in the treasury."

CONGRESS.

The House Passes Bill for a Permanent Census Bureau.

Washington, Jan. 31.—The house yesterday passed the bill for the creation of a permanent census bureau. The friends of the civil service law, who were opposed to making the employes of the bureau eligible for transfer or retention were overwhelmingly defeated. By the terms of the bill the permanent organization will succeed the present temporary organization July 1, 1902, and all employes on the rolls upon the date of the passage of the act will become eligible for transfer to other departments or retention in the present organization. The bill also provides for a manufacturing census in 1905, and for the collection of certain statistics annually. Early in the session a bill was passed for the protection of the lives of miners in the territories.

In the Senate.

Yesterday's session of the senate was entirely void of the tumultuous scenes which characterized the sessions of the past three days. After the Philippine tariff measure was taken up at 2 o'clock Mr. Tillman delivered a speech devoted almost entirely to a discussion of the part his state took in the war for independence of the colonies. Incidentally he referred occasionally to the pending bill, drawing morals, he said, for the benefit of the majority, that they might be applied to the Philippines. Prior to taking up the Philippine bill the senate passed a number of unobjected bills on the calendar.

IN FOR LIFE.

Jim Howard Convicted of the Murder of Gov. Goebel.

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 1.—The jury in the case of Jim Howard, involved in the murder of Gov. Goebel, returned a verdict of guilty yesterday and fixed Howard's punishment at life imprisonment. This was Howard's second trial, the first one having resulted in a death sentence. A new trial was granted by the court of appeals. Howard will appeal.

CANADIAN PACIFIC PLUM.

London, Feb. 1. — The government has issued the terms of its five-year contract with the Canadian Pacific railroad for the conveyance of mails, troops and stores monthly between Halifax, Quebec or Montreal and Hongkong for an annual subsidy of £60,000, of which the dominion contributes $15,000.

ENGLISH WORKMEN SLOW.

Gilbert Parker Compares Them With American Mechanics.

New York, Feb. 1.—Gilbert Parker, the English author and member of parliament, said before sailing for home on the St. Paul: One of the objects of my visit here was to look into the labor question for parliament. In my opinion the American workman is more enterprising than the English. The American workman welcomes machinery, while the English workman has not come up to that yet.

IS TENTATIVE SUGGESTION.

Dutch Note to England Not a Specific Peace Proposal.

London, Jan. 31. — Reuter's Telegram company says the Dutch government submitted no peace proposals in its note to Great Britain. The communication to Great Britain partakes of the character of a tentative suggestion, intended to facilitate the conclusion of the war. Until some definite step is taken by the Boer belligerents, it is regarded as doubtful whether any practical advance can be made.

In the house of commons this afternoon the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, first lord of the treasury and government leader in the house, said he would not to-day be able to lay the communication from the Dutch government in regard to peace in South Africa before the house, and probably not this week.

Mr. Balfour said: "I am not able to name a day for laying the correspondence before the house. I don't imagine that the Dutch government will until to-morrow be in possession of our reply. It is impossible to lay anything on the table just yet, but I hope there will not be a long delay."

A Friendly Negotiator.

The Daily News, giving the alleged Genesis of the proposal from the government of The Netherlands on the subject of the South African war, says that from the first Dr. Kuyper, the Dutch premier, stipulated that he would take no part in either arbitration or mediation, and accepted the view that he would have to bring pressure to bear on the Boer delegates to persuade them to abandon their demand for independence. He explained his position to an English visitor who went to urge him to take action. This visitor afterward communicated to Mr. Chamberlain, the colonial secretary, and to Lord Lansdowne, the secretary for foreign affairs, Dr. Kuyper's views, and his offer to become a "friendly negotiator." Mr. Chamberlain courteously replied that he was interested in the proposal, but could not recognize any approaches unless they were made directly by the Boers themselves. The reply of Lord Lansdowne intimated that he had sent the proposal to Lord Salisbury, the premier, and that there the matter had remained until Dr. Kuyper visited London.

At Queen's Command.

The Brussels correspondent of the Standard declares that the peace initiative on the part of Holland was decided upon at the personal instigation of Queen Wilhelmina in a cabinet council, at which she presided. The correspondent says that Mr. Kruger was informally and confidentially acquainted with this proposed step, but declared that he could not charge the Dutch government with any mission of peace as long as Great Britain rejected the idea of Boer independence.

THE NEW TAX LAW

Effect of Contitutional Amendments Proposed by Tax Commission.

Constitutional Provisions for Equality and Uniformity of Taxation and Exemption of Churches and Charitable Institutions to Be Repealed—Property to Be Classified in Districts Giving no Guarantee of Uniformity of Taxation Throughout the State as Now Provided for—All Farm Lands to Be Classified and Taxed at the Same Rate, Regardless of Value.

Instead of proposing an amendment conferring upon the legislature authority to exempt from taxation mortgages, credits, of a given class, goods held for immediate sale or for storage, and manufacturing materials for immediate use, and to provide for taxing incomes, the Commission propose to abrogate Sections 1, 2, 3 and 4, of Article IX of the Constitution, which provide for equality and uniformity of taxation throughout the State, and which exempt churches and charitable institutions and other property from taxation, and to substitute therefor provisions which abolish equality and uniformity of taxation throughout the State, and give the Legislature power to classify property as subject to taxation and to exempt all property not classified.

ARTICLE IX OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Section 1 provides:

"All taxes to be raised in this State shall be as nearly equal as may be, and all property on which taxes are to be levied shall have a cash valuation and be equalized and uniform throughout the State."

Sec. 2. The Legislature shall provide for an annual tax sufficient to defray the ordinary estimated expenses of the State for each year, and whenever it shall happen that such ordinary expenses of the State for any year shall exceed the income of the State for such year, the Legislature shall provide for levying a tax for the ensuing year sufficient, with other sources of income, to pay the deficiency of the preceding year, together with the estimated expenses of such ensuing year.

Sec. 3. Laws shall be passed taxing all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, and also all real and personal property, according to its true value in money, but public burying grounds, public school houses, public hospitals, academies, colleges, universities and all seminaries of learning, all churches, church property used for religious purposes, and houses of worship, institutions of purely public charity, public property used for any public purpose, and personal property to an amount not exceeding in value $200 for each individual, shall, by general laws, be excempted from taxation.

Sec. 4. Laws shall be passed for taxing notes and bills discounted or purchased, moneys loaned, and other property, effects or dues of every description of all banks and all bankers, so that all property employed in banking shall always be subject to a taxation equal to that imposed on the property of individuals.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS.

1, as above stated, the Commission propose to abrogate the sections of the Constitution referred to, and to substitute new and radically different provisions.

Section 1, which provides that taxes shall be as nearly equal as may be, and that all property taxed shall have a cash valuation and be equalized and uniform throughout the State, is abrogated, and in the place of it the Commission propose an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 1. THE POWER OF TAXATION SHALL NEVER BE SURRENDERED OR SUSPENDED."

2, Section 2, which provides for an annual tax sufficient to defray the expenses of the State, is repealed, and in the place of it the commission propose the following:

"SEC. 2. ALL TAXES SHALL BE UNIFORM UPON THE SAME CLASS OF SUBJECTS WITHIN THE TERRITORIAL LIMITS OF THE AUTHORITY LEVYING THE TAXES, AND SHALL BE LEVIED AND COLLECTED UNDER GENERAL LAWS FOR PUBLIC PURPOSES."

(a) This proposed amendment authorizes the Legislature, by legislative act, or through the agency of county officers or other officers selected for the purpose, to classify subjects of taxation within the Territorial limits of the authority levying the tax. Subjects of taxation, that is, property to be taxed, is left to the will of the Legislature. The rule of equality and uniformity of taxation at cash value throughout the State is abolished. Some property may be classified as a subject of taxation and other property exempted, and the rule of uniformity which now obtains throughout the State is made to apply only to the district, that is, the Territorial limits of the authority levying the tax. The Legislature may fix the Territorial limits of the authority levying the tax and may subdivide the State into as many divisions for purposes of taxation as it may think best. There may be one or one thousand taxing districts. Property within any such district is to be classified and the tax upon the same class is to be uniform.

(b) Public burying grounds, school houses, hospitals, academies, colleges, universities, seminaries of learning, churches, church property used for religious purposes, houses of worship, institutions of public charity, public property used exclusively for public purposes, personal property to an amount not exceeding in value Two Hundred Dollars for each individual, are exempt from taxation.

Under this proposed amendment classes of property described will be no longer exempt. All such property will become subject to taxation unless the Legislature or those authorized by it to act see fit not to include it in or among classes of property subject to taxation within the Territorial limits of the authority levying the tax.

All churches, church property, schools, seminaries and colleges will be subject to taxation. The sewing machine of the seamstress, the horse of the cart man, the small investments and savings of the poor, even to the amount of Five Dollars, will be subject to taxation unless exempted in the classification to be made in the given taxing district.

(c) The provision that taxes shall be uniform throughout the State is abolished. They are to be uniform within the tax district, that is, within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax. The authority levying the tax will act with reference to the rule of uniformity adopted within the limits of the taxing district. It follows that there may be different rules of uniformity. At present the rule of uniformity applies throughout the State. By the proposed amendment it applies within the several taxing districts.

3, Section 3 of the Constitution, which provides that laws shall be passed taxing all moneys, credits, investments in bonds and stocks, or otherwise, and also all real and personal property, according to its true value in money, is abrogated, and in its place the Commission propose the following:

"SEC. 3. THE LEGISLATURE MAY, BY GENERAL LAWS, PROVIDE FOR AN APPORTIONMENT TO THE COUNTIES OF AN AMOUNT OF REVENUE TO BE RAISED THEREIN FOR STATE PURPOSES, AND MAY, IN ANY LAW, PROVIDING FOR SUCH APPORTIONMENT, AUTHORIZE COUNTIES TO SELECT THE SUBJECTS UPON WHICH REVENUE IS TO BE RAISED THEREIN FOR STATE OR COUNTY PURPOSES, AND TO APPORTION SUCH REVENUE AMONG THE CITIES, VILLAGES AND TOWNSHIPS OF THE COUNTY."

(a) Thus under this proposed amendment the Legislature may confer upon each county the right to select the subject upon which revenue shall be raised by the county, not only to meet its proportion of the state taxes, but the county tax. The right to select the subject of taxation involves the right to classify property for the purpose.

(b) Under this amendment the taxing officers of Ramsey County may select the subject, that is, the property within the county upon which the revenue is to be raised for county taxes and the county proportion of State taxes. One county in a state may select as the proper subject for taxation the real estate within the county, or a certain class of real estate like timber or farm lands, improved or unimproved lands. Another county may select personal property, and being selected as the proper subject upon which revenue is to be raised, all real estate will be exempt. One county may select churches, colleges, seminaries and grave yards as the sole subject for taxation; one may select banks, insurance companies and corporations as the proper subject for taxation. Thus, in each county of the state the county tax and the county proportion of the state tax may be apportioned upon property to be selected by the county and classified for the purpose. The rule of equality does not obtain as respects any property and the rule of uniformity only as respects the subject of the tax in a particular taxing district.

RULE OF UNIFORMITY.

Since the rule of uniformity obtains only as respects a given class, and since there may be more than one class of property made the subject of taxation of each district, the rate of tax may differ as to each class. Farm lands being classified, the rate upon farm lands must be the same. Timber and unimproved lands being separately classified, the rate upon such lands in the same district may be different. Real estate being classified the rate may be one thing; personal property being classified the rate may be another. In short, one class of property in each taxing district may be made to bear the entire burden of taxation within the district; even though there may be different classes, the rate upon one class may be so high as to practically impose upon it all the burden.

Diplomat's Wife Retorts.

One night at a great party, royalty was present, and was bestowing its condescending attention upon the diplomats in attendance. One haughty princess, after addressing with the proper title, all the other ladies present, turned to the American ambassadress and said:

"I hope you and your family are well, madam?"

This was not the first time she had been so treated, and the little Yankee woman's wrath overflowed. She did not hesitate, in the crowded company, promptly to rebuke the princess by ignoring her question and replying to the "madame" part with a loud, firm, "Excellenza bitte!" ((Excellency, if you please!")—World's Work.

Approaching the shaft, the mule noticed the safety gate open, stood still a few minutes, as if meditating, then kicked the tail chain loose and plunged past the drivers into the shaft, which contains seventy feet of water.—Mahoney City (Pa.) His Manner Was Effective.

"Well, what are your symptoms?"

The young man started. "Oh, I beg your pardon, sir, but I observed a striking resemblance in you to the man who used to milk father's cows down on the farm. By the way, could you kindly tell me when the case of Evans vs. Evans will be set down for trial?"

WEAPONS USED AGAINST OUR SOLDIERS IN THE PHILIPPINES

Thanks to the efforts of Prof. Paul Beckwith, curator of the historical collections, the National Museum has just received a complete set of the various types of cutting, slashing and decapitating weapons used in the Philippine Islands. The major portion of this collection was purchased from a Mr. Harkins, a young Georgian collector at present serving with the army in the Philippines.

In making this collection Professor Beckwith and Mr. Harkins have for months applied themselves to the study of the extensive lore of these weapons. As a result Prof. Beckwith was enabled, in an address before the American Anthropological Society recently, to present for the first time in history the correct classification of these weapons.

He explained that every form of Philippine weapon denoted some rank, or had some significance; that each form was known under a distinct term; and that the Filipino, as he rose from lower to higher rank, saved the weapons that had marked his station, and placed them successively over the main entrance to his house, with those of his ancestors.

These weapons are manufactured chiefly by the Moros of Mindanao and Sulu, and the classification and nomenclature of their makers is accepted throughout the Philippines, Borneo and surrounding Malay islands. The blades, made of steel, rivaling the famous swords of Japan, are made in rude furnaces out of the excellent "bog iron" found on their islands.

The various weapons, usually called "bolos" in the United States, are known by the natives under the following names:

The borong, a weapon denoting civil rank to its owner, such as officer of the council, judge or administrative officer.

The kris, worn by the Datos or Sultans, an extremely ornate weapon, with wavy blade and handles of carved ivory. In the kris market No. 2 the lower part of the handle is set sometimes with pigeon-blood rubies, diamonds and star sapphires. The blade of kris No. 1 is inlaid with small disks of haliotis shell, giving it a curious, flashing appearance.

The campilan, like the borong, has handles of ornamental wood. This weapon, with a tuft of bright red hair attached to the handle, is carried by officers below the rank of Major, while the campilan, minus this tuft, is the weapon of the common soldier. The back and ends of No. 1 are ornamented with flutings and small holes perforated in the metal, while on the handles of all campilans one finds a set of staples, known as "sword-breakers."

Prof. Beckwith explains the "sword breaker" was found on every sword used in Europe during the middle ages, and has survived only in the Philippines in the campilan. In battle the soldier seeks to catch the point of the blade of his enemy's weapon in this staple on the handle of his campilan, when by a quick turn he snaps the blade of his opponent in two.

The weapon marked talibong, No. 2, is nearly four feet in length. It is used with both hands. The handle is of wood, half the length being wrapped with planted bamboo. The talibong is carried by every fifth soldier, and is used for decapitating the enemy's wounded left on the ground.

The sundang is carried by the laboring classes and used for cutting cane, clearing land, etc., much as the machete is used in the West Indies.

The pira is the strangest of all Filipino weapons, and thus far Professor Beckwith has been unable to determine its use. The handle is made of carabon, or water buffalo horn, with a long, thick prong running upward, making the handle almost as long as the blade. When one attempts to strike with this weapon this prong comes in contact with the user's elbow, preventing free use of the implement. Professor Beckwith believes that this weapon may be for ceremonial purposes and used by the priests.

The terciada is the weapon carried by the commanding officers, and has a gorgeous handle of ornamental wood and of few jewels.

The bolo is carried by the crews of vessels and is the favorite weapon of the Malay pirates.

The quinbasi is the weapon of general utility, the jackknife carried by every Filipino, while the punal de kris is the small knife carried by women and children.—Chicago Tribune.

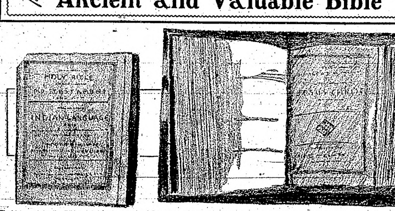
Ancient and Valuable Bible



The history of the first Bible printed in America is a monumental record of the devotion and persistence of John Eliot, Not quite 300 years ago Eliot reached New England filled with the idea of relieving the minds of the Indian races from their spiritual darkness.

He encountered difficulties that are almost incredible, but by force of indomitable will he overcame all obstacles and in 1663 gave to the Indians a Bible in their own language.

To collectors of rare books the Eliot Bibles are coveted treasures. Only about 100 copies are known to exist, and as time passes the price of these rarities steadily increases.

At the sale of the Brinley library in New York in March, 1879, an Eliot Bible of 1663 was sold for $1,000. At an auction in 1884 a Bible of 1685, which is far less desirable from a collector's standpoint, brought $950.

In London, at a sale held July 2, Bernard Quaritch bought for the late Mr. Kalbfleisch of New York an Eliot Bible of 1663 containing the English title pages and dedication to Charles II, for £580, or about $2,900.

Mr. George H. Richmond of New York now has a copy of this Bible that was at one time in the Bodleian Library. Its subsequent history is quite interesting. It came to this country about 1863, and was bought by Mr. J. T. Bruce. When his books were sold in 1868 John A. Rice of Chicago paid $1,130 for it. In 1870 J. W. Bouton secured it at the Rice sale for $1,050.

He sold it to William Menzies, from whom J. J. Cooke of Providence obtained it for $900. Brayton Ives paid $1,250 for this Bible at the Cooke sale, and at the Ives sale it passed into the hands of Bowden & Smith (Mitchell's) for $1,650.

It is magnificently bound by Bedford and the price is now as much as one would have to pay for a modest house, viz., $4,500.

Some idea of the appearance of the Algonquin language in which the Eliot Bible is printed may be had from the following version of the Lord's Prayer as it appears in the Eliot Bible;

Nooshun kesukgut quttianatamunach koowesuonk. Peyaumooutch kukketassootamoonk, kuttenantamoonk ne n nach ohkeit neane kesukqut. Nummeetsuongash asekesukokish assamainnean yeuyeu kesukok. Wit and Humor.

The head master of a Welsh school, with the object of giving his higher class a practical lesson in the use of the barometer, placed the instrument on a window about seven feet from the ground, at the same time telling his scholars to note any change in it and report to him.

During the dinner hour, one boy, more meddlesome than the others, began tampering with the glass, with the result that it fell to the ground and was broken to pieces. Anticipating matters, he watched for the master's return from dinner, and, rushing to meet him, observed, excitedly:

"Sir, the barometer has fallen."

"How much?" asked the pedagogue, thinking of climatic changes.

"Seven feet," was the reply, to the amazement of the master.

He Was Superfine.

They were speaking of a man whose name is known to society in general, and to the play-going woman in particular. His personality and his pictured presentments are matters of vital interest and curiosity to the matinee girl.

"I've heard that he is so gentle and amiable, is it so?" inquired a girl of the six-footer who had the honor of the celebrity's acquaintance.

"And his pictures look so sweet and sad," broke in another girl. "He's awfully refined, isn't he?"

"Worse than that," said the six-footer with a grin and a twinkle in his eye. "He's positively convent bred!"

When They Probably Began.

As he nursed the finger he had accidentally hit he made some very violent and startling remarks, but she only looked at him dreamily. She was of an investigating turn of mind.

To Be Considered.

"I see that your town has been considering the idea of imposing a tax on bachelors."

"Yes," answered the young woman. "But we thought it over, and we concluded that the men might be mean enough to take the money to pay it out of what they spend for caramels and theater tickets."

"You know," said the orang-outang, "that man is descended from a monkey." "Yes," answered the chimpanzee, "and his descent has been very great. But let us set it down to his credit that he tries to rise again. Every now and then you hear of some man who is doing his best to make a monkey of himself."

SWEPT BY FLAMES

WATERBURY, CONN., HAS A DESPERATE FIGHT WITH FIERY ELEMENT.

BUSINESS SECTION IS IN RUINS

FIRE BREAKS OUT DURING THE HARDEST GALE OF THE WINTER.

THREATENED WITH DESTRUCTION

CONSERVATIVE ESTIMATES PLACE THE LOSS AT ABOUT $2,000,000.

Waterbury, Conn., Feb. 4. — In the hardest gale of the winter Waterbury struggled last night with a fire that destroyed a large area of the business section of the city and threatened to wipe it out completely.

The blaze started in the upholstery department on the third floor of the store of the Read & Hughes Dry Goods company at 108-120 Bank street, and that store and many adjoining buildings were wrecked in a few hours to smouldering embers.

An estimate of $2,000,000 as the amount of property loss on buildings and contents was considered conservative by insurance men. The origin of the fire is unknown and it was undiscovered until it had gained tremendous headway. At 6:15 p. m. three employes of the Read & Hughes company were in the store, and when they left they noticed no odor of smoke about the main floor. Fifteen minutes later flames were seen to burst with great force from the windows of the third floor and from the basement. Before anybody could ring in an alarm the whole interior of the building was a mass of flames. When the department reached the scene flames were issuing from every window in the building and it was evident that the structure was doomed and the entire business section of the city was imperiled.

The fire started in a drizzling rain with a rapidly rising wind, and with the increasing cold the rain turned to snow. The wind was at first shifting, but it settled toward the east and carried destruction with it. After 9 o'clock the militia was called out to preserve order. There was serious talk of blowing up buildings to prevent the spread of the flames. Shortly after midnight the fire, which had apparently been brought under control, broke out in new places, and the efforts of the local firemen, combined with the

and apparatus from Hartford, Torrington, Bridgeport, New Haven and Naugatuck, seemed powerless to stay its progress. The blaze was wiping out the business portion of the city, all the fire being confined to that part of the city, though the resident section was in danger by sparks driven by the furious wind. In the panic caused by the fire there were many rumors of accidents and fatalities, but at the Waterbury hospital at 1 o'clock it was said that no accidents or deaths had been reported there. At that hour the fire was still burning, though as viewed from the hospital, which is on an eminence commanding a view of the city, it appeared that its vigor was abating. Hope was expressed that the worst of the fire was over and that it would soon be under control. Conservative estimates place the loss at $2,000,000.

LANDS SAVED TO THE STATE.

Long Drawn Controversy Over Swamp Land Grant Is Adjusted.

Duluth, Minn., Feb. 4. — The long drawn controversy between the State of Minnesota and the Duluth & Iron Range Railroad company over the swamp land grant of that company, involving 45,079 acres of land that includes three valuable iron mines, has finally been adjusted satisfactorily to all parties. The case was a somewhat complicated one. Subsequent to the granting by the state to the Iron Range road of ten sections of swamp land for each mile of the railroad, the road's title became clouded by its alleged failure to comply with certain conditions of the grant and a suit resulted. On Jan. 8, 1900, Judge Lochren of the United States court decided that the company's title was valid and attached to its decree was a list of lands to which the company's title was declared absolute. Over a year later it was discovered that list included by mistake 45,079 acres of land held in trust by the state for the benefit of state institutions. An investigation developed that the error was a clerical one or a misapprehension on the part of the attorneys. The problem, however, was a difficult one for the state, because the time for the appeal from the decree had expired. Proposals were then submitted by the state officials to the railroad company for an adjustment and after long negotiations these have been accepted. In effect the company releases all state institution lands and will select other swamp land in lieu of them within six months. Judge Lochren will modify his decree in accordance with the stipulations.

EVIDENCES OF FRAUD.

Two Thousand Claims in the Minot District Under Suspicion.

Fargo, N. D., Feb. 4.—"Twenty per cent of the claims made in the Minot land district within the past eighteen months are being contested," is the report of a realty man who has just returned from the northwestern part of the state. Roughly speaking, there have been 10,000 claims taken within the last year and a half, and of this number 2,000 are being questioned. The same authority thinks that from 50 to 75 per cent of the contests will be against original homesteaders. Those being contested were taken by traveling men and business and office men in the eastern part of North Dakota and in Minnesota. The existence of frauds in this connection is generally admitted, and many of the men that assert their homestead rights have voted in other parts of the state since making the entry. Some even hold municipal and county offices. Many never see their claims twenty-four hours in every six months.

The prisoner and the officers took a special train yesterday afternoon and found the diamonds where they were hidden the day of the robbery. The original wallet containing some of the diamonds in the trunk was found, and the balance of them were found in the pocket of McCarty's overcoat, which had been torn out. McCarty served a year and a half in the Stillwater penitentiary for robbing a postoffice in Minnesota.

UNKNOWN SUICIDE.

Strange Note Left Explaining the Reason for the Deed.

Duluth, Minn., Feb. 4. — A special from Bemidji reports a peculiar suicide there Friday night when an unknown young man who had arrived that morning took a dose of strychnine. Nothing indicating his identity was found, except the following strange note: "Expecting to end my existence to-night, I write these lines in explanation of the deed. On account of a peculiar physical defect my life has been one of misery, both to myself and to those with whom I have lived. This defect, of course, is something for which I am not to blame, and also something which I can never get rid of. So I think I am fully justified in taking this course. In fact, I think it is my duty to my fellow man, as a firm believer in the Christian religion. Wish no efforts to be made to find relatives." He was about twenty-five years old, six feet tall and dark.

MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED LIVES ARE LOST IN A MEXICAN MINE.

AWFUL WORK OF AN EXPLOSION

FEDERAL TROOPS ARE CONDUCTING THE WORK OF REMOVING THE DEAD.

SORROWFUL SCENE AT THE MINE

WAILS AND WEEPING OF THE BEREAVED WOULD TOUCH THE HARDEST HEART.

San Antonio, Tex., Feb. 4.—The latest information from the Hondo (Mex.) mine explosion shows it to have been fully as serious as at first reported.

There were over 100 miners at work in the mine when the explosion occurred, and all of the are dead. The majority of the victims are Mexicans and Chinamen. Very few Americans were at work in the mine.

Every mule in the mine was killed. The work of clearing away the wreck in order to get at the bodies is being rushed as rapidly as possible, but there is no hope that any of the men will be rescued alive. The explosion was caused by striking a gas pocket. The loss to the owners of the mine is very heavy.

The mines have been taken in charge by a force of federal troops who are conducting the work of removing the mangled bodies of the dead. No official information is given out as to the number of dead, but it is stated that more than 100 bodies have been brought to the surface and it is believed that there are at least twenty other dead bodies in the mine. The scene at the mine is indescribable. The wives and children of the dead surround the building in which the remains of their loved ones are placed, and their wails and weeping would touch the hardest heart.

GOES OUT ON FOUL

ROOT WINS THROUGH THE UNFAIR TACTICS OF GARDNER.

NASTY BLOW LAYS HIM LOW

HURRICANE FIGHT IN WHICH GARDNER PROVES THE AGGRESSOR.

ROOT IS THE SUPERIOR BOXER

GARDNER IS ROUNDLY HISSED BY AN IMMENSE AUDIENCE.

San Francisco, Feb. 2. — In the seventh round of what was to have been a twenty-round encounter between George Gardner of Lowell, Mass., and Jack Root of Chicago, the latter was awarded the decision here last night upon the claim of foul. In a hurricane fight that developed Gardner as the aggressor, but Root as the superior boxer, the Lowell man was beaten and finally forfeited upon a blow conceded by a majority of the spectators to have been a straight foul. Gardner found in Root no such easy opponent as "Kid" Carter had been, nor did Root find in Gardner so easily handled a man as Byers, when the two met here. Gardner, however, fought on the outside in a wild and uncertain style, while Root fought on the inside determinedly and well. Gardner suffered the disadvantage of having his left eye practically closed by a right-hand punch in the second round, and he was never himself after that. In the fourth round, however, he missed his only opportunity during the battle. The Lowell man delivered a vigorous right-hand punch that caught Root apparently behind the ear and the Chicago man went down. Root took the count to four seconds, then held saving himself for nearly half a minute. In the sixth round Gardner was fighting low and the claim of foul was made upon two occasions but ignored by Referee Phil Ward. When the round closed Gardner was plainly in distress and stood small chance of winning.

The seventh round opened with Root boring in methodically and Gardner fighting wild in evident desperation. It was then, after one minute and forty-six seconds of this sort of work that Gardner started a left reach for the stomach and caught Root squarely in the groin. The Chicago man sank to the floor with a groan and Gardner was dragged to his corner by his trainer, Aleck Greggains. Referee Ward at once awarded the decision to Root, and Gardner, approaching him, protested that the blow was purely accidental. The 7,000 people gathered in the Mechanics pavilion hissed Gardner as he left for his dressing room, and applauded Root with vigor when he had sufficiently recovered to leave the ring. "I did not mean to foul him," was Gardner's statement immediately after the fight.

All the family partook of the poisoned drink and only the prompt work of physicians saved the father and brothers of Ionia. AGAINST SCHLEY

ORIGINAL OPINIONS ADHERED TO BY THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

"COMMENT" ON ADMIRAL'S APPEAL

JUDGE ADVOCATE LEMLY AND SOLICITOR HANNA REVIEWED THE CASE.

SCHLEY WAS NOT IN COMMAND

POSITIVE AND EMPHATIC DENIAL OF ALL THE ADMIRAL'S ASSERTIONS.

Washington, Jan. 31. — In the most positive and emphatic language, without qualification of it, Capt. S. C. Lemly, U. S. N., the judge advocate of the Schley court of inquiry, and E. P. Hanna, his legal assistant in the contest of that notable investigation, deny the assertions of Admiral Schley and his counsel in their appeal to President Roosevelt that evidence given before the court showed that admiral Schley directed the American fleet in the naval battle off Santiago, and being in absolute command was entitled to the credit of the victory. The "comment" of Capt. Lemly and Mr. Hanna upon Admiral Schley's appeal was delivered to President Roosevelt on Jan. 27. Action by the president on the appeal may be expected by the end of next week. The commentators begin with the statement that Admiral Schley and his counsel have Shifted Their Ground.

They say the chief features of the case were "the retrograde movement," "disobedience of orders," "inaccurate and misleading official reports," "failure to destroy vessels of the enemy lying within sight," and "injustice to a brother officer." The commentators say: "Upon all the above named features, believed by us to be the most important, if not the only important matters, into which the court made inquiry, the conduct of Admiral Schley was condemned by that most distinguished tribunal, Admiral Dewey and Rear Admirals Benham and Ramsey, united in their findings and opinion upon all of these several points, and they united also in the significant recommendation that no further proceedings be had 'in view of the length of time which has elapsed since the occurrence of the events of

The Santiago Campaign.'"

The commentators charge that Admiral Schley now ignores all these grave matters and bases his appeal upon unimportant features of the case as compared with the grave matters above referred to, upon which there was nil, and in the face of the testimony could not have been any difference of opinion in the court. The commentators say they recognize the fact that Admiral Schley devoted by far the larger part of his appeal to the question of command, and consequently gave that question a proportionate space in their "comment." They declare that the question is between Sampson and Schley, both alike interested, and to investigate it fairly both should be heard. It is pointed out by the judge advocate that Admiral Schley and his counsel from the condemnation passed upon his conduct by the unanimous vote of the court for the retrograde movement, disobedience of orders, inaccurate and misleading official reports, failure to destroy vessels of the enemy lying within sight and injustice to a brother officer. Admiral Schley's veracity is twice brought into question by the judge advocate, and in one instance he is accused of having in his appeal quoted testimony of his own that signals were made in the battle, while failing to state that it was subsequently shown that they were not made. It is denied emphatically by the judge advocate that a single ship except the Brooklyn received or obeyed an order from Schley from the beginning to the end of the battle.

NO REST FOR SCHLEY.

Enthusiastic Admirers at Louisville Keep Him Busy.

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 1. — Admiral Schley, as the guest of the Louisville Knights Templar, had little opportunity to rest yesterday. From ten o'clock in the morning, when he visited the girls' high school, until he left the Templar ball at the Galt house at midnight, every moment of his time was occupied. The greater portion of the day was spent among children and the admiral shook hands with about 1,000 boys and girls, who expressed their pleasure by cheering their visitor and presenting him with flowers. In the afternoon the most enthusiastic demonstration of Admiral Schley's visit took place while he was leaving the Pendennis club in the carriage which was to take him to the Masonic Widows and Orphans' home. As he stepped into the vehicle it was surrounded by hundreds of cheering men, women and children who had been gathering in the streets for half an hour, and who pressed around him eager to shake his hand.

As a result a number of arrests have been made, and sentiment is for inflicting the severity of the law against the accused. Several have already received a commensurate sentence. Public sentiment has been wrought to hostility by the annoyance of the places. The present movement is an indication that the community is in earnest in enforcing the law.

A Stick in His Brain.

Elk Point, S. D., Feb. 1.—Suspicions of foul play in the injuries of Richard Connolly, in whose head a splinter ran three inches at his brother's home, are rife. The family tells conflicting stories, and it is the theory of officers that Connolly was struck over the head with a chair in a family fight. He is still alive in spite of the fact that the stick pulled from his head was covered with brain matter, but if he dies a coroner's inquest will be held.

BRITISH GOVERNMENT HAS NOT REJECTED PEACE OVERTURES.

Its Answer to the Note From The Hague Is Not an Acceptance of the Suggestion Offered, but It Is Thought That Note Is So Worded as to Permit Further Negotiations.

London, Feb. 1.—The British reply to the Dutch note in regard to bringing about peace in South Africa is now in the hands of the Dutch government. The contents of the note are kept secret, but the first publication of the text is intended to be made in parliament Monday, Feb. 3. The original summary of the Dutch communication was doubtless correct, with this addition, that the Dutch suggested that Wessels, Wolmarans and Fischer, the Boer delegates now in Europe, be permitted to go to South Africa in an endeavor to persuade the burghers in the field to surrender.

Great Britain's reply is not in the nature of a direct negative, though it is not unlikely that it will have that effect. While Lord Lansdowne probably leaves a loophole for further suggestions, he doubts the ability of the Boer delegates to control their fellow countrymen, and there seems little likelihood that the Dutch can secure guarantees in regard to the powers of the Boer delegates sufficient to induce Great Britain to accede to the original request.

A Polite Refusal.

Wiring from The Hague, the correspondent of the Daily Mail says that the reply of Great Britain to the Dutch note concerning peace in South Africa is a polite refusal of the request that permission be granted for a commission to proceed to South Africa.

"The lack of any authorization by the Boers has proved fatal," says the correspondent, "but the door of negotiations is not wholly closed, since Great Britain's reply reaffirms the willingness of that country to accede to any authorized proposal tending to the conclusion of peace."

That Remount Scandal.

Mr. Brodrick's presentation to-day in the house of commons of the supplementary army estimate furnished Sir Blundell Maple (Conservative) with an opportunity to refer to yesterday's report of the committee appointed to inquire into the purchases of horses for the British army, which, while censuring Sir John for unjustifiable attacks upon the integrity of officers, found that excessive prices were paid. Sir John asserted that his original statements were true, and he submitted letters to show that certain officers were mixed up in horse swindles at Budapest and Vienna. He also asserted that the evidence before the committee revealed a gross scandal.

Mr. Hobhouse, a member of the committee, defended the officers, but declared that the investigations revealed glaring shortcomings in the remount department. The speaker estimated that the war office had bestowed on the contractors a profit totaling £8,000,000.

At that juncture Sir William Vernon Harcourt (Liberal) said he desired some explanation regarding the new contracts for food.

Mr. Brodrick replied somewhat flippantly, whereupon there were loud cries of order, and Sir William, amid cheers, sharply reminded the war secretary that it was the custom of the house for members to treat one another with "gentlemanly courtesy."

Government Majority Dwindles.

Henry Labouchere moved an amendment to the supplementary army vote as a protest against the money wasted by the remount department in buying horses.

The government majority sank to thirty-one on the vote on the amendment.

Kruger Holds Out.

London, Feb. 1.—A dispatch from Brussels, published this morning in the Daily Telegraph, says that Mr. Kruger presided last Friday at a meeting held at his residence in Utrecht of all the Boer delegates in Europe, when several expressed themselves in favor of accepting the advance of Queen Wilhelmina and the government of the Netherlands to abandon their claim to independence, but that Mr. Kruger and Dr. Leyds were still obdurate.

ALL ARE AFTER DEWET.

Twenty-Three Columns of British Troops Hunt Him While Cape Revolt Grows.

London, Feb. 1.—The Ladysmith correspondent of the Daily News reports that twenty-three British columns are hunting for Gen. Dewet, and says the assertion that his capture or the annihilation of his force is only a question of time is more justified than ever before.

Everything indicates a powerful effort to crush the Boers everywhere in March and April. The Boers in the field, however, are surprisingly numerous and well equipped. It is suspected that they have been reinforced by rebels from the Cape Colony.

The Daily Mail's Cape Town correspondent announces that great preparations are being made for a general movement against the Boers and rebels in the far northwest. The latter are also preparing for resistance.

They are storing large quantities of grain and other supplies in Bushmanland, where military operations will be most difficult. The correspondent predicts that the troubles will continue in Bushmanland for perhaps years.

PISTOL FIGHT ON A TRAIN.

Conductor and Negro Tramp Are Both Killed.

Hopkinsville, Ky., Feb. 1.—A pistol fight at Pembroke last night resulted in the death of Robert Johnson, aged forty, a conductor on a Louisville & Nashville freight train, and William Sherman, a negro, whom Johnson caught stealing a ride. The negro opened fire, shooting Johnson through the neck. The conductor, after being wounded, drew his revolver and fired four times, two balls passing through Sherman's breast. The negro died later his body being found in the woods near by. Conductor Johnson died in three hours. His body was sent to his home in Nashville.

WILLOW STICK GRAFT.

Farmer Paid a Stranger to Locate a Flow for Him.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 31. — Joseph Tholey, a Roberts county farmer, has for some time been very anxious to strike a good flow of water on his farm. The other day a stranger came along and told him that for a certain sum of money he would tell him exactly where to strike water. The stranger had a willow stick, and after walking around with it for some time, stopped and said: "Right here is all the water you and your neighbors need, and eighteen feet is as deep as you will have to dig." Tholey paid the "grafter" his price and then commenced to dig. He dug eighteen feet without striking a drop of water, and then dug eighteen feet more, when he struck a stone that was about eighteen feet across. Tholey now admits that the stranger was a fakir, and hereafter men carrying willow sticks who trespass on his farm will be greeted with a shotgun.

HAD TUMOR ON THE BRAIN.

One of the Sherburne Raiders Dies at the Stillwater Prison.

Stillwater, Minn., Jan. 31. — Louis Kellehan, one of the two bicycle-mounted robbers who raided the bank at Sherburne in October, 1896, killing the cashier and a visitor there, died at the prison, and the surgeons who held the autopsy have devoted his brain to the cause of medical science. Kellehan's accomplice, his elder brother, was riddled with bullets during the pursuit of the posse and Louis was sentenced to be hung, but his apparently weak mental condition led to commutation of his sentence. The autopsy showed a tumor on the brain, and Warden Wolfer will prepare a history of the case, with a report of the autopsy, for the study of criminologists.

GIGANTIC COAL COMBINE.

Only One Coal Office Each for the Twin Cities.

St. Paul, Jan. 31. — A consolidation which will reduce all St. Paul buyers of coal to the necessity of going to one office for their fuel is practically assured. The same plan is to be applied in Minneapolis, and inasmuch as the coal companies represented in the Twin City market control the entire Northwestern fuel situation, the effects of the newest merger will be far-reaching. It contemplates absolute control of anthracite and bituminous coal. Some selling companies with direct mining connection have been and will be bought. Other retail dealers who have hitherto bought their coal from the big wholesale dealers will simply be wiped off the face of the earth.

BRIDEGROOM IN JAIL.

Minnesota Man Is Charged With Stealing the Rig in Which He Drove to His Wedding.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 31.—Carl J. Carlson of Halstad, Minn., yesterday was arrested at Mapleton, twelve miles west of Fargo, on a charge of horse stealing. Tuesday night he hired a team at Doyle's barn in Fargo and stated that he intended to drive over to Minnesota to be married. He did not return, and yesterday forenoon he was located at Mapleton, endeavoring to sell the outfit. When arrested he informed the authorities that he met Miss Mary Christianson at the Fargo depot on the arrival of the train from Crookston, drove to Mapleton, from which place he sent her to Grand Forks, and endeavored to dispose of the team and join her.

GREATER MILWAUKEE.

Wisconsin City Wants to Merge With County Government.

Milwaukee, Jan. 31.—The suggestion of Mayor Rose for a Greater Milwaukee, to be made by merging the city and county governments, has borne fruit. The council passed a resolution creating a committee to prepare a memorial to the legislature in order to bring about the change. The resolution suggests that the legislature be asked to authorize the use of the New England township charter system, under which each individual composing the population of the city, to a certain extent, is responsible for the acts of the officers of the city.

CHURCH GOES UP IN SMOKE.

People's Church of St. Paul Destroyed by Fire.

St. Paul, Jan. 31.—Nothing but four charred and blackened walls remain of the People's church. Fire started at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the boiler room of the church, and in a few hours nothing remained of the auditorium where the world's greatest singers and musicians have sung and played, and where famed novelists, scientists, travelers and orators have spoken. Rev. Samuel G. Smith, the pastor, lost his valuable library in the fire. The building was erected at a cost of $100,000. The insurance was $50,000.

Celebrate Sioux Massacre.

New Ulm, Jan. 31.—The old settlers who took an active part in the affairs that made this city famous in the Sioux massacre have about decided to celebrate the anniversary next August. The purpose is to make the celebration cover two or three days and to have a general reunion of those who suffered. It is now forty years since Little Crow made himself so obnoxious to the citizens of this then sparcely settled country. The plan is well received and will be forwarded by large numbers.

UNIQUE DEADLOCK

CAUSE OF THE DELAY IN RELEASING MISS STONE AND COMPANION.

SQUABBLE ABOUT THE RANSOM

BRIGANDS WANT IT PAID IN TURKEY, BUT THE PORTE SAYS BULGARIA.

CAPTIVES ARE SAFE AND WELL

HOW LONG THE DEADLOCK WILL CONTINUE IS PROBLEMATICAL.

Constantinople, Feb. 2.—Information received a few days ago from Miss Stone led to active negotiations for her immediate release. The first letters, which arrived through a trusted quarter from Miss Stone, stated that both she and Mme. Tsilka were well, and also the latter's baby.

Before actively opening negotiations letters containing questions were sent through the same channel with a view of proving that there was no doubt of the identity of the persons involved. For example, Mme. Tsilka, although a Bulgarian, was asked to give the name, address, etc., of a friend near Boston. The answers settled all doubts and negotiations were reopened for the release of Miss Stone and her companion. This resulted in the sending of American representatives to Serres, Macedonia, accompanied by a canvass not in uniform. They bore strong letters from the porte to the Ottoman authorities at Serres and carried £13,200. The final arrangements were to be made at a village ten miles north of Serres, near the frontier. The captives are still in that locality, but in Turkish territory.

The brigands insist that the ransom shall be paid in Turkey and not in Bulgaria, while the porte insists that the ransom must not be paid in Turkey. There the matter rests, and how long this unique deadlock will continue is problematical.

CLAMORED FOR HIS LIFE.

Incensed Mob Gets After a Bank Cashier.

Bellwood, Neb., Feb. 2.—Dick Gould, assistant cashier of the Platte Valley State bank, was placed under arrest yesterday afternoon. He was taken to David City on the evening freight train. On his way to the depot he was followed by a large crowd of the depositors of the bank. He bore up bravely until he reached the depot platform, when some one in the crowd called for a rope, when he jumped onto the train with all possible speed. The crowd pushed its way onto the train and it was with difficulty the angry men were driven back. The streets of Bellwood are still crowded daily and all kinds of threats are being indulged in against the Gould brothers. It is thought further arrests will follow.

SNEER CAUSES MURDER.

Quarrel in a Barroom Ends in Double Tragedy.

Boston, Feb. 2.—Sneered at by George McGibbon, whom he had met in the barroom of the Shakespeare inn for the first time yesterday, John Bonnette shot and killed him and then killed himself. Bonnette, noticing that his ale glass had not been properly rinsed, spoke to the bartender about it. McGibbon sneered at this and words and blows followed. The quarrel continued to the sidewalk, where Bonnette drew a revolver and shot McGibbon in the face, killing him instantly. Bonnette ran around the corner where, facing a crowd of pursuers, he shot himself in the right temple and fell dead. Both were workingmen of good reputation.

CHASED AROUND THE GLOBE.

Man Wanted on Numerous Charges of Forgery Is Arrested.

Chicago, Feb. 2.—After being pursued by detectives through England, France and a large portion of the United States, Jeremiah Foley, thirty-eight years old, a former paymaster in the British army, wanted on forty-seven different charges of forgery, was arrested here last night. Foley has been living in Chicago for some time with his wife and two-year-old child. The couple will be held awaiting the arrival of extradition papers from London.

After Gregory County Land.

Vermillion, S. D., Feb. 2. — Many young men of Clay and adjoining counties have their eyes on Gregory county and are preparing to take a trip to that locality to investigate the soil. CONGRESS.

Senate Again Gets Excited Over Philippine Matters.

Washington, Jan. 30. — For an hour yesterday the senate had under discussion the question whether a censorship of press dispatches existed in Manila. While no such turbulent scenes as Tuesday's were enacted, the debate for a time was spirited. The secretary of war was quoted as saying that no press censorship now existed in the Philippines, and a letter from Gen. Greeley, chief signal officer of the army, was presented by Mr. Beveridge of Indiana, making the statement officially that there was no censorship of press dispatches, and that "the press is entirely free."

It was contended by the opposition that a press censorship did exist in the Philippines and that copies of every news dispatch filed with the cable company was filed with the military authorities. That, it was maintained, constituted a virtual censorship.

In the House.

The house yesterday adjourned after being in session twenty-five minutes. Mr. Hopkins of Illinois reported the permanent census bill and gave notice that he would call it up to-day. A request to make the oleomargarine bill a special order for next Monday was objected to on the Democratic side.

M'KINLEY'S BIRTHDAY.

Fittingly Celebrated in All Parts of the Country.

St. Paul, Jan. 31.—The fifty-ninth anniversary of the birth of President McKinley yesterday was celebrated generally throughout the country. In many cities the routine of the pupils of the public schools was suspended. Some of President McKinley's speeches were read in the schools, patriotic hymns were sung, and in many buildings eulogies were delivered by local speakers. There was no general suspension of business, but flags were generously displayed about the cities and some buildings were decorated. Memorial services were held in many churches and by the G. A. R. posts. In some of the states where legislatures are convening joint sessions were held, at which speeches in eulogy of the martyred president were made. Notable instances were those in Iowa, where Gov. Cummins addressed the joint session of the legislature, and in Ohio, where praises of the late president occupied the members of the legislature in joint session.

IN HONOR OF M'KINLEY.

Prominent Men Attend a Banquet in New York.

New York, Jan. 31.—The annual banquet of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation was held last night in the grand ball room of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel. The function this year had a double object in view: first, to do honor to the memory of William McKinley, and secondly, to encourage the closer union of capital and labor. Among the guests were two former members of President McKinley's cabinet—Charles Emory Smith, ex-postmaster general, and John W. Griggs, ex-attorney general.

CANTON PAYS TRIBUTE.

Memory of Martyred President Is Kept Green.

Canton, Ohio, Jan. 31. — Cantonians paid loving tribute to the late President McKinley in a memorial meeting at the Tabernacle last night, which was participated in by people in all walks of life to the number that overtaxed the big inclosure where many of the same people had so often listened to the words of their old friend and neighbor. The chief orator of the meeting was Hon. William Dudley Foulke of Indiana, the warm personal friend of the late president, recently selected by President Roosevelt for membership on the civil service commission.

"I'M GOING TO DIE TO-DAY."

Laughing Remark of a Kenosha Girl Is Only Too True.

Kenosha, Wis., Jan. 31. — Miss Anna Zeisemer died suddenly under peculiar circumstances in this city Tuesday night. Miss Zeisemer was apparently in perfect health in the morning when she started to work. She laughed and chatted with her companions. During the walk she turned to Miss Mary Link and said: "I'm going to die this afternoon." The girl reached the factory and started toward the work room, when she fell in a faint. She was taken to her home in a carriage and died shortly after 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

RESERVE BANKS.

Favorable Report on the Bill of Representative Cousins.

Washington, Jan. 31.—The house committee on banking and currency yesterday ordered a favorable report on the bill of Representative Cousins of Iowa, authorizing the selection of reserve banks in cities of 15,000 population instead of 50,000, as at present, and having a minimum capital of $100,000 instead of $200,000 as now.

For a South Dakota Exhibit.

Huron, S. D., Jan. 31.—It is understood that Gov. Herried will attend the convention of the South Dakota Business Men's convention in this city Feb. 2, at which time ways and means for a South Dakota representation at St. Louis will be discussed. Already a number of delegations to the convention have been chosen, and the attendance promises to be general.

Poured Oil on a Fire.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Jan. 31.—J. F. Faulk of Manson was probably fatally burned by an explosion caused by pouring oil on the fire. The explosion set fire to his clothing.

Chile Buys Arms.

Berlin, Jan. 31.—The Chilean government has ordered 15,000 sword bayonets from Solingen, Prussia, and six weeks ago the agent in Germany of Argentina also placed some orders for arms with German manufacturers.

Boom for Manitoba.

Winnipeg, Jan. 31.—Thirty-six thousand settlers for the Northwest Territory this year. This is the official report made by J. Obed Smith, dominion immigration commissioner. The settlers are from the States.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XIV—(Continued.)

Mr. Nugent Leathwood's brain had been busy while she was talking. He began to conceive a plan so daring, and yet so ludicrous on the face of it, and so designed to cheat the unsuspicious George Reeks and bring down punishment upon him, that he could scarcely forbear from laughing at the mere thought of it. But he kept a steady face, and looked at Mrs. Reeks with an expression of pity and sorrow for that suffering woman which almost drove her frantic.

"My dear lady, far be it from me to cause you any unnecessary pain," he said, laying his hand, with the delicate touch of sympathy, upon her arm; "but in a matter of this kind it is well to be frank. Your husband has, unfortunately, formed an attachment for this young lady (don't cry out or make a noise, I beg of you), and has, for some purpose of his own, abducted her from her home this very night. I am her guardian; I heard of it; I followed, as rapidly as possible."

"Oh—good heavens!" exclaimed the poor lady, under her breath.

"Naturally enough, my dear madam," went on Nugent, glibly, "I am anxious, if possible, to escape any scandal: and, above all, to avoid having the name of a foolish, headstrong girl mixed up in such a business. I am her guardian, as I have said: and if it be within my power, I should like to take the girl away with me at once, and as quietly as possible. You tell me that your husband is asleep: why should not this foolish girl be smuggled out of the house as quietly as she was smuggled into it?"

Mrs. Reeks was in too great a state of excitement to be able to think clearly or to know what to do at that moment; but she did see, very distinctly, the tables turned upon that false husband of hers when he woke in the morning to find the girl gone. Already Mrs. Reeks saw herself reveling in a condition of stony silence, while Mr. Reeks frantically endeavored to discover where the girl had gone, and what part Mrs. R. had played in the business. Under all the circumstances it was, perhaps, only natural that she should jump at a chance of revenging herself, and, at the same time, getting rid of the visitor—a chance which was, moreover, an easy one.

"I don't understand it, sir," she said; "but I do know that I won't have that woman in the house another five minutes. You are her guardia; you certainly have the right to take her away and to bring her to her proper senses. A pretty thing, indeed, if respectable men are to be made the victims of designing—"

"It is a great shame, I admit," broke in Nugent, "but perhaps the less said about the matter the better. Where is this young lady?"

Mrs. Reeks pointed toward the door of the sitting room; Nugent Leathwood nodded and stretched out his hand for the candle.

"If you will permit me," he said, "to see the young lady alone for a moment, I think I can have little difficulty in persuading her to return with me."

Mrs. Reeks closed her eyes and shivered virtuously. "I have no desire to see her, I can assure you," she replied.

Nugent Leathwood took the candle and passed quietly into the room. The young girl had stretched herself out on the old-fashioned chintz-covered sofa, and was sleeping quietly; the man stood with the candle in his hand looking down at her for a moment in silence.

"Yes you're worth making a fight for, my Sleeping Beauty," he muttered. I believe I may even turn out a respectable member of society if I once have you with me. They tell me you've been having dreams and visions, and such-like things, since that sickness of yours. I wonder what vision induced you to come here, with that old madman tonight. Well, I must induce you to go back again, and after that I'll run no more risks of losing you."

He set down the candle, and then bent over the girl and spoke her name in his softest and most agreeable accents.

"Olive!"

She opened her eyes on the instant, and looked up at him with a smile; seemed, as she came fully awake, to recognize something in his face that brough a shade of fear to her own, and started upright. The man laid a quiet hand upon her shoulder.

"Don't be frightened, Olive," he said; "I have come to take you home. Do you understand? To take you home"

She looked up at him wildly a moment, as though she failed to understand where she was or how she had reached that place. Nugent Leathwood, watching her eagerly, wondered what clue he should get as to the best fashion of persuading her to come away with him. And, even while he waited, he got the clue he sought.

The girl's face cleared, as if by magic. Whatever dream was in her poor, disturbed brain at that moment, found expression in the one word that had power always to call her back, even if not to sane things, at least to the brighter memory of happier days. She spoke that one word, eagerly, now.

"Gilbert! I might have known: Gilbert wants me—Gilbert has sent you to fetch me! He said always I was to go to him if he sent."

The man turned away from her, abruptly, as though he could not bear the sight of her smiling face. "Always that name!" he muttered. "The fellow might be killed a hundred times—might be buried under a mountain—and she would think of him. I'll make her forget him some day!"

But he had got what he wanted. He turned to the girl quickly and answered her, with an eager smile upon his face:

"Yes, that's right; Gilbert wants you—Gilbert sent me. Won't you come to him?"

For answer, she got up at once and put her hands trustingly in his. "Take me to him," she said.

She put on her hat as rapidly as her trembling fingers would allow, and the man carefully adjusted her cloak about her shoulders. Outside, in the little narrow hall, they found Mrs. Reeks waiting in the dark; that lady averted her face when she caught sight of Olive, and remained stonily indifferent to the departure. But at the last moment, when his hand was actually upon the outer door, Nugent Leathwood came back and whispered swiftly in the ear of Mrs. Reeks:

"Say what you like to your husband about this—or say nothing at all, just as you think best. But tell him that I expect the papers he is to bring me within two days from this time. Legally, they are mine; but he shall have the reward I promised if he lets me have them by that time; after that I will take means to force them from him—and he will get nothing."

Before the startled Mrs. Reeks had time to formulate a reply, or to ask any questions, Nugent Leathwood and the girl were gone and the door had closed behind them. Mrs. Reeks picked up the candle and went into the little sitting room and sat down.

Then for the first time, when it was too late, she began to realize what she had done and to be very considerably frightened. She began to understand, from those concluding words her mysterious visitor had used, that both he and the girl were, in some curious fashion, mixed up in that strange business of Gilbert Rickerby. What if she had, after all, made a blunder, and brought upon her unfortunate husband greater peril and difficulties than before? However, her fears soon gave place to that virtuous feeling of indignation with which she had buoyed herself up before; she determined to brave the matter out to the end.

"I don't care," she said to herself; "if there has been any mistake, it's the fault of George Reeks; he should have told me what he was doing, and not have gone about it in such a secret, mysterious, shoot-the-moon sort of fashion."

Comforted by this reflection, Mrs. Reeks crept up stairs and went to bed. Her husband was sleeping so soundly that there appeared to be no chance of disturbing him; but Mrs. Reeks was very careful in her movements, nevertheless. Only, before getting into bed, she shook a fist in the face of the sleeping, smiling little man.

Mr. Reeks slept late the next day, and awoke in broad daylight, in that blissful condition which one sometimes experiences when a body is thoroughly rested and the the mind at ease. In fact, so comfortable did Mr. Reeks feel, and so little did any of the forgotten incidents of the two previous days affect him, that his sole feeling was one of unmistakable hunger; he began to wonder what there was for breakfast. Within a very short time of that first springing out of slumber he presented himself before Mrs. Reeks, dressed and smiling, and cheerfully rubbing his hands. He remembered no more concerning those same exciting happenings than if they had been dreams, which had troubled him in the night and been forgotten in the morning.

"Morning, my love—morning!" he exclaimed. "I'm afraid—afraid I'm a little late this morning, my dear."

"Do not mention it, I beg," said Mrs. Reeks. She had been prepared for a wild outburst—a scene of tumult; she began to think, for her part, that she had been walking in her sleep or suffering from nightmare. However, she set out the delayed breakfast, and Mr. Reeks fel to with an appetite.

After a few moments a remarkable change came over him. Mrs. Reeks, who had finished her own breakfast hours before, had seated herself opposite to him, the better to attend to his wants, and also for a certain purpose of politeness, which she might have shown to a guest. Mr. Reeks had looked up at her placidly once or twice—had nodded and smiled good-humoredly—and had gone on with his breakfast, as though the sight of her had given him renewed appetite. But at last Mrs. Reeks, watching him narrowly, observed a change beginning to steal over him. Once he laid down his fork and looked all around the room, in a bewildered fashion, as though striving hard to recollect something; took up the knife and fork slowly; plunged the fork into a morsel, and began to convey it to his mouth; stopped dead, and dropped it on his plate with a clatter. Mrs. Reeks held on to the table and felt inclined to scream, for she knew that he had remembered!

The next moment he started to his feet with a shout, upsetting the chair as he did so; darted across the room, and stared down at the empty sofa on which he had left the girl on the previous night; dropped on his hands and knees on the floor, and thrust his head underneath the sofa, as though he fully expected to find the girl there; started to his feet, and faced Mrs. Reeks.

"The girl! I brought a young lady here—last night; where is she?"

In his excitement and hurry he was quite unconscious of the fact that he held in his hand the knife he had been using at his breakfast; he flourished it wildly as he spoke, and Mrs. Reeks, despite the air of bravado she assumed, quailed before him.

"I am aware that you brought home, a young female last night, George Reeks. You did not know that I was aware of the disgraceful occurrence; but I saw everything. This creature has been restored to her natural and proper guardian."

The little man sat down upon the sofa, with his mouth wide open, and stared helplessly at Mrs. Reeks. "I—I don't understand," he said. "I brought here last night a young lady whom I had been asked to take charge of for a few days. She was in great danger and distress; for that reason I had to bring her at dead of night. Where is she?"

The stiffness was fast going out of Mrs. Reeks; she looked across at her husband, almost apologetically. "I—I did it for the best, George," she began, lamely.

"Did what for the best?" cried George Reeks, starting to his feet. "Where is this young girl?"

"A gentleman came here last night soon after you had gone to bed. He told me that you had taken away this young girl out of his charge—a sort of abduction, George. He said that he was her natural and proper guardian; that he did not want scandal or fuss. And he took her away with him."

Mr. Reeks, in hopeless bewilderment, stood staring for a few moments at his wife, finally dropped the knife he held at his feet, and clutched both sides of his scanty hair with his hands.

"George; don't look like that! What have I done? If you had only told me what you intended at first—"

"Don't talk, my dear, don't talk!" implored the unhappy Mr. Reeks. "I don't know quite what you've done, or what you haven't done. But you've got me into a horrible muddle, and I don't quite see what I am to do to get out of it. Now, let's be calm; for Heaven's sake, let's be calm!"

He looked anything but calm himself, as he walked up and down the room, clutching his hair and muttering to himself; but, after a few moments, he stopped in front of his wife and put a question.

"Tell me—this man who came in the middle of the night and took away the girl—what was he like?"

"A very dark man, with a swarthy skin and black eyes. Spoke in a soft voice."

Mr. Reeks gasped. "Leathwood—by all that's wicked!" he exclaimed. "My love," he went on, with desperate calmness, "in one moment you have undone what I and others have plotted to do, to save a young and innocent girl from a villain; in one moment you have given that young and innocent girl back into the hands of a man for whom no name is too bad. I suppose I ought to have told you; but do I look, my dear, the sort of a man who would abduct a young girl and bring her into your house in the dead of night and leave her on the sitting room sofa? Do I look it, my dear?"

Mrs. Reeks burst into tears, and admitted, through her sobs, that he certainly did not.

"There, it is no use crying, my dear; we've got to do the business all over again. The girl is in danger, and must be got out of the place to which Leathwood will have taken her. She can't be brought here again, because Leathwood knows this house, and would only come here again for her. But I must go there at once—that's certain. Did he leave any message; did he say anything at all to you?"

"He said that he expected you to bring the papers you had promised within two days," replied Mrs. Reeks.

"Oh, indeed—did he?" said Mr. Reeks, sarcastically. "Anything else?"

"That if you brought them within that time you should have the reward; if not, he would force you to give them up, and you would get nothing."

The little man buttoned his coat resolutely, and shook his head, with an air of defiance. "We shall see," he said, grimly. "Now, understand, my love, that under no circumstances do you give up those papers. I may be away for some time; I can't tell at all what I may have to do. But you shall hear from me. This man, Leathwood, may come here in the hope of getting the papers; don't let him have them."

"If he gets them out of me he'll be clever," responded Mrs. Reeks. "But, George, you're not going to run any risks or get into any dangers, are you? Think of me, George; think of me!"

"My love," replied the little man, "duty calls me, and I must not hold back. But whatever danger I may rush into (for I am naturally a bold man, Lily, as you are aware), I shall think, even to the last, of you." Then, reverting to his more natural manner, he said: "I heartily wish I'd never mixed myself up in this business; but I can't bear to think of that young girl in danger. Don't forget about the papers. Good-bye—good-bye."

He rushed out into the little hall, followed by Mrs. Reeks, who assisted him to struggle into his overcoat. Ramming his hat firmly on his head, he started forth at a pace that must have astonished any of the neighbors who had been in the habit of seeing him saunter out on ordinary occasions.

He never stopped or slackened his pace until he came into the neighborhood of Rickerby's Folly. It was still comparatively early in the afternoon; and the little man knew that, to carry out his purpose with any chance of success, he must not be seen by anyone in the house. So he cooled his heels and his impatience at the same time in the adjoining streets; and when the kindly darkness had fallen upon St. John's Wood, crept round to the back entrance in the alley, out of which Gilbert Rickerby had thrust him on the night of the strange burial in the garden. Even here he dared not knock or make any sign; he could only wait in patience, on the chance of something fortunate happening to assist him.

He had to wait a very considerable time, and had just began to make up his mind to an attempt to scale the high wall, when he heard the sound of feet among the dead leaves inside. Not knowing what else to do, the little man rapped sharply with his knuckles on the wooden door; and then drew back flat against the wall beside it, hoping to escape notice if the person who answered the summons should not prove to be the one he wanted.

In a moment or two the door was cautiously opened, after a little grating of the key in the lock, and a head was thrust forth. The head turned slowly in the direction of Mr. Reeks, and then an arm was extended out to beckon him. As he reached the gate the hand belonging to the arm caught hold of him and drew him swiftly inside.

"This is good of you, Reeks," said the voice of Gilbert Rickerby. "I have just heard what has happened—or part of it, at least. Old Jemima has just come to me—the first moment she could get to me—and has told me that Leathwood brought poor Olive back last night. I haven't time to ask how he got her away from you or what has happened; suffice it that she is here, and that we have failed."

"No; don't say that, Mr. Rickerby," whispered the little man, excitedly. "I came round as soon as ever I knew of it; but I had to wait until dark. We must get her away again, sir; and at once. The only question is—how is it to be done?"

"Upon my word, my friend, you put fresh heart into me," said Gilbert. "I was just making up my mind to take her away myself; but don't you realize how difficult that is? I scarcely know where to take her—and then, again, did ever the world see two such poor travelers? She, poor girl, believes me to be dead, and has no idea of the peril in which she stands, or of the real state of her case; her mind is completely unhinged. For my part, I have no name—no position—nothing. I dare not show myself or say who I really am. More than all that, I cannot quit this place and leave that villain unpunished or my poor servant unavenged; I mean to see the end of this matter, be the end what it may."

"Yes; I think I understand that. The only thing is, I suppose, for me to do over again what I have so disgracefully mismanaged, and take care of the young lady myself. The only thing is—where are we to take her?"

"I have thought of that," replied Gilbert, at once. "The man Taggett, whom you saw in the garden last night, left here yesterday with his wife. They have secured an engagement with some small traveling show. He told me, before he left, through Jemima, that they stopped to-night at Barnet, at a little inn called the Crown and Cushion. He will be willing, I know, to take care of the girl. I have a plan in my head for bringing this rascal to book and making some of his villainies recoil on his own head. Jemima has gone to prepare Miss Mallory and to get her out of the house; I had made up my mind to take her away myself, in despair of any better chance of doing so. No one will suspect old Jemima; the girl will be here directly. See, here is money; more than you will need. Will you run at once to the nearest livery stable or cabrank and get a vehicle that will take you at once, and swiftly, to Barnet? We cannot run the risk of the publicity of railway trains."

The little man took the money which was pressed into his hand and ran out on his errand. He found a livery stable in a back street; and, by cheerful payment and copious bribes, soon had a closed four-wheeled vehicle at his disposal. Leaving this in a street out of sight of the house, he hurried back to find Gilbert talking earnestly to the muffled figure of the young girl, while the old woman stood quietly at a little distance. There was no time for explanations and courtesies in the darkness, Gilbert and the little man half-persuaded, half-dragged the trembling girl along and helped her into the vehicle, Jemima staying behind to guard the gate.

Immediately afterwards the horse had started; Mr. Reeks sat in the darkness of the vehicle with his companion, and Gilbert Rickerby was hurrying back to the house.

CHAPTER XV.

Cornelius goes to the Play.

Mr. Cornelius Veevers was zealous in his master's service for two reasons: first, because he felt sure that his master would, out of sheer gratitude, enrich him; and, secondly, because, if the truth were told, he feared a little for his own neck in regard to the murder. He knew enough of Nugent Leathwood to know that, if in jeopardy himself, he would not hesitate to denounce the man who had assisted him, and to point out, pretty clearly, that man's actual part in the business, with such possible additions as his own imagination or ingenuity might suggest. For that double reason, too, Leathwood knew that he could trust the old man, and, therefore, gave him his confidence fully.

On the night when Olive Mallory was taken back by Nugent to Rickerby's Folly, Cornelius had opened the gate to them, and had chuckled to think how easily the bird had been captured again. So, too, when Olive was missing for the second time—quite late at night—Cornelius was the first to point out where she was likely to be found, and to put his finger upon the actual people who were likely to have aided her escape.

Of course, it was necessary that Jemima, as the one person into whose special charge the girl had been put, should make good her part of the story; it might have gone hard with her, as regarded her husband, had she failed to do this. Therefore, when some two hours had elapsed after Gilbert Rickerby had returned, she entered the room where Nugent Leathwood was seated, smoking and writing, and laconically delivered her message:

"It ain't worth mentionin', p'r'aps," she said, "but that gel is missin' again."

Leathwood sprang from his chair. "What do you mean? Didn't I tell you to give strict attention to her—never let her out of your sight? To-morrow I was to have taken her away with me, as you know."

"Yes—I know that," said Jemima, without moving a muscle of her face.

"And now you've let her go again! But she can't have gone far; you have not looked for her. She must be about the place somewhere."

"I jist went away from the room a minute, an' w'en I got back she was gorn. Stoopid-like, I left the door open; so careless of me. But I've 'unted 'igh an' low—an' there ain't no sign of 'er."

"I tell you she must be in the grounds somewhere or in the house," said Nugent, making for the door. "You old fool—as if you couldn't keep that baby of a girl safe! She mustn't get into the streets as she is now," he muttered, as he hurried out of the room. "Goodness only knows what she might say, or what story she might tell, of this Gilbert Rickerby, who is forever in her thoughts.—Here—Cornelius—Cornelius!"

Cornelius came shuffling out of another room and confronted his master. Nugent caught him by the arm and whispered what he had to say, as though he feared someone migh hear him, even in that house, to which no one ever came.

"The girl's gone! Don't stare like that; that old idiot wife of yours has let her slip. Alone, she can't have gone far, and Jemima says that she has slipped out within these past few minutes. Come along—you to the right, I to the left; we must bring her back!"

As they hurried through the house, and into the garden, Leathwood continued to urge his fears breathlessly to Cornelius.

"Before, that girl, Ursula, brought about the business, assisted by that rascal, Reeks. I don't think she'd dare to try it again, or he, either. If she has merely slipped out—come on, dodderer; how slow you are—we may find her; if there has been treachery again they shall answer for it, whoever they are. Come back here if you don't find her in ten minutes."

They separated and hurried off on their different ways. Within ten minutes they stood again at the gate; looked into each other's eyes, and had no need of words to tell that they had failed.

"Not a sign of her anywhere," said Leathwood, savagely. I've stared into the face of every woman I've seen; I've raced down side streets after likely ones. Not a sign of her; and you?"

"She ain't gorn my way—that I'll swear," said Cornelius. 'Nearly blown—I am, and not so muyh as a shake of her finger 'ave I seen. What do you make of it?"

"I make treachery of it—that's what I make," said Leathwood, closing the gate and standing for a moment in the darkness of the garden. "I don't like it; there's something here I don't understand—something that takes the nerve out of me. Think, man—what it means! The only creature on earth who could be interested in her is dean—we know how; yet there are people conspiring and plotting to get this girl away. Why?"

"'Ow should I know?" asked Cornelius, resentfully. "Maybe they don't like the looks of you, and they think the gel would be better off somewhere else. Don't ask me why!"

"I can't make it out," said Leathwood, thoughtfully. He was staring at the ground. He chanced to raise his head as he spoke, gave a sort of cry, and clutched Cornelius. "Look—for heaven's sake, look!" he whispered, in a shaking voice. "What's that?"

Cornelius Veevers, with a curious feeling upon him, as though warm air were stirring about his scalp, turned to look in the same direction. Upon the blind of that room they had cause to remember so well, appeared again the shadow of a man—growing and growing until it filled the space between the top and bottom of the window; then disappearing, as suddenly as it had come. Cornelius breathed heavily, but tried to look unconcerned.

A POET AND THE KING.

The Former Hereafter Shall Write For the Magazines—The Work of Cruel Critics.

A poet, whose lines never would scan, was summoned before the king and commanded to show cause why he should not be put to death.

"If your ear is imperfect," said the king, "you should count your syllables on your fingers, like an honest workman."

"May your highness outlive your prime minister by as many years as remains to you," said the poet, reverently. "I do count my syllables. But, observe, my left hand lacks a finger—bitten off by a critic."

"Then," said the king, why don't you count on the right hand?"

"Alas!" was the reply of the poet, as he held up the mutilated right, "that is impossible—there is nothing to count with! It is the forefinger that is lacking."

"Unfortunate man!" exclaimed the sympathetic monarch. "We must make your limitations and disabilities immaterial. You shall write for the magazines."—San Francisco Examiner.

Miss Wilkins' Greatest Success.

While all of Miss Wilkins successful books have been stories of New England, there has not been any of them which has met with the same success as her new book, "The Portion of Labor," in the same period of time. This novel was first published on Nov. 8, and the first demand for it, which was the "natural" demand always to be counted upon after the publication of a popular author's work, has steadily increased at an unusual rate each week since. The American girl, Ellen, who is the heroine of the book, is an inspiring young creature—youthful, brave, beautiful, ardent, full of youth's most exalted ideals; full, too, of something of the same stuff martyrs are made of—though, happily, Miss Wilkins would not permit her to endure a martyrdom of any length.—Harper's Weekly.

Their Hunting Dog a Goat.

Charles Hileman and William Cartwright, wire nail workers, started out before daybreak for a hunt. Hileman has a fine dog and his son has a goat. The dog and the goat are about the same size and sleep in the barn. The barn was dark at the time the rig was got out for the hunting trip. After all was ready Hileman went into a dark corner to pick up the dog, which he supposed was asleep. He got the goat instead, and, not noticing his mistake, put "Billy" into the rear of the wagon. After the wagon had bumped over the roads two miles from town the goat gave a plaintive bleat, and the hunters hurried back to town, but too late to cover up the joke. The dog was still asleep in the barn.—Indianapolis News.

He Meant the Other Biped.

A man once received a present from a sea captain, a fine specimen of the bird known as the laughing jackass. As he was carrying it home he met a brawny Irish navvy, who stopped him.

"Phwat koind of a burrd is that, sir?" asked the man.

"That's a laughing jackass," explained the owner, genially.

The Irishman, thinking he was being made fun of, was equal to the occasion, and responded, with a twinkle of the eye:

"It's not yerself—it's the burrd I mane, sor!"—London Spare Moments.

The Prisoner's Mistake.

The archduke Salvator, who is cruising among the Greek islands, remained some time at Ithaca on his yacht, the Nymph, in order to photograph and sketch the surrounding scenery. Several prisoners confined in the Ithaca jail, believing an archduke's power to be illimitable, escaped from prison and swam by night to the yacht, supposing that they would be safe under his protection. The archduke had the exhausted men conveyed to the machinery room, where they were fed and clothed, but returned them, in spite of their vehement protests, to the Greek authorities the next morning.—London Telegraph.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

An Anglo-American Alliance.

Mrs. Craig Tells Why.

Mrs. Pearl Craig (John Oliver Hobbes) gives an interesting reason why women novelists usually adopt pseudonyms.

"It is because," she says, "of an unaccountable association in the popular mind between the writer and her heroines. So women use a man's name, because we are anxious that it should not be supposed that we were guilty of all the adventures of our heroines."—London Dispatch to New York World.

Saved Her Future Husband.

A pretty little romance has come to light as a result of a marriage license granted to John M. Diver and Edna Luella Keener at Flora, Ind. Miss Keener is the young woman who assisted another girl in flagging a Panhandle train last summer and saved it from running on to a burning bridge near Aoka. The girls ran down the track to meet the train and waved their sunbonnets until they attracted the attention of the trainmen. They were so overcome with gratitude that they embraced the girls and made up a purse for them. Diver was the conductor of the train, and ever since the incident he has been in love with Miss Keener, and has been paying her attention.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

A Timely Loan

By EVA WILLIAMS MALONE

Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Publishing Company.

Two grizzled Confederate veterans sat in the corridor of a Memphis hotel, turning again the pages of that Book of the Past, where soldiers love to linger.

"Love and war?—why not?" said the captain; "the two are indissolubly wedded. There's something about a soldier's life that makes love a necessity. Many a time and oft I've heard my general say that the men without sweethearts or wives were easier to whip and easier to kill than the fellows who were tethered to life by a good strong affection. Why, man alive! I've heard the echo of "Take Your Gun and Go, John," so loud above the noise of shell and shrapnel that I could have sworn it was the real thing; and when I went into battle it was of her I thought, and of what she would say!"

"Who was she? Where was she?" asked the comrade with a quizzical smile.

"Who was she? Why, she was various, various persons, according to the location of my command. Once she was a dreamy Vicksburg aristocrat—blue blood to her finger tips; then she shifted and became 'The Merriest Girl That's Out' up in Maury county, Tenn. After that, she somehow got to be a Virginia girl—but that's a long tale and goes deep."

"The deeper the better; fire away."

And the veteran settled himself contentedly to listen.

"Well, you see," continued the captain, "we had moved on to Petersburg and were hoping—but what's the use of saying anything about our hopes?"

"Skip 'em!" said the other with a sigh that showed the kindred soul; "a Confederate's hopes—in war, not love, you understand—are things a fellow must learn to forget. But when Cupid was afield, that's another matter. You were near Petersburg?"

"Yes, but hang it all, so were the Yankees, and getting nearer every day. We all felt that a battle was imminent; and were waiting to see just what turn to take. We filled in the time of waiting—why should we not?—by getting acquainted with some of Virginia's fair daughters. Know anything about those Virginia women?" and the captain paused as if the answer to this question gave the clue to what was to follow.

"My wife's a Virginian," the other answered succinctly.

"She is? Oh, well, then, explanations and amplification are unnecessary. You can easily understand that crossing the Appomattox at night and being shot at occasionally by Yankee pickets was the jolliest sort of fun when the smile of a pretty Virginia girl was the reward."

"Only one?" asked the comrade, incredulously.

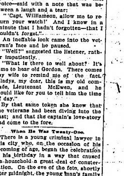
"For me—only one! There were others, a sister and a lot of cousins. You know how the woman folks congregated in the big Southern homes in those perilous days. But soon Miss Gladys was, for me, the inevitable 'She.' The others simply didn't exist. Col. Bascom, her father, was a wealthy tobacco planter; and I don't need to tell you just what sort of welcome we ragged rebels got in those old homes at that time. We were all comrades to the men and heroes to the women. That accounts for the luck some of us had."

"For instance?" tentatively suggested his friend.

"Now don't try to hurry a fellow—it's good to go over those days, and, like rare old wine, one loves to sip it leisurely. But Miss Gladys! You should have seen her?"

"Skip it!" interjected the other. "I've traveled the road, and they all look alike at that period. Angel? Yes, that's all right. Had you proposed?"

"No, I hadn't. I was just in that blissful borderland where anything so tangible as a proposal seems sacrilege. I think I must have meant to, if I had stopped to ask myself what I really did mean. Well, matters were at this blissful state; Col. Bascom telling the boys they were welcome whenever they chose to come, and the girls, not telling them so in words, but making them feel in a thousand delicate little ways."



"Love and war? Why not?"

"I've felt 'em," said the other dryly.

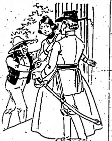
"Now, see here, old fellow, if you don't quit putting in, you are going to miss General Gordon's speech this evening, for I'm billed to finish this yarn before we get up from here. Where was I?"

"With Miss Gladys, I presume."

"Yes, I remember, the night the Yanks came in on us. We were all in the parlor—Lieutenant Preston, Chalmers and a lot of us boys. Gladys was looking so perfectly ravishing, if she did wear a homespun dress, that I'd been plotting for an hour to get her out on the veranda to myself. Just as I had succeeded, and was in the seventh heaven, my dream of bliss was rudely disturbed by Pete, Col. Bascom's body servant, rushing across the lawn and crying out:

"'Git in de house, Miss Gladys, fuh de Lawd's sake! Do Yankees am a comin'.'

"I hadn't said a word that would bind Gladys to me, or me to her; and this was no time for wordy proposals. I jerked out my watch, a handsome diamond-studded gift from my mother, and slipped it in her hand. 'If I am killed it is yours—if I live it is ours;' and, without another word, I mounted my horse, as did the others. We escaped and made our way to our commands across the Appomattox. You know the story of the days that followed. Petersburg fell, Richmond fell Lee capitulated and—the end."



"Do Yankees am comin'!"

The two comrades seemed looking backward through the mist of years—involuntarily they grasped each other's hands for an instant; then the speaker went on:

"Before I started, penniless and almost naked, to my Tennessee home, I went to Col. Bascom's and found it a ruin. The house had been burned, the family and slaves were scattered, and I tried in vain to get some trace of them. It was rough lines; but what could a fellow do?"

"Swallow it," suggested his comrade.

"Yes, swallow it; as we did the rest and try to remember that we were men and—Confederates. I went back to Tennessee, and worked to build up my law practice. I wrote to Gladys, to Col. Bascom, for I was hard hit, old man; but I couldn't hear a word. A couple of years later, some law business called me to Philadelphia. I went by way of Petersburg."

His companion cleared his throat ominously; but the speaker took no notice.

"I had done my best to make myself forget that Virginia girl; but somehow her image wouldn't fade like the others had. I don't know whether I meant to make another effort to hunt her up or not. I know something seemed to draw me to Petersburg. And, would you believe it, the very first man I met as I started out of the depot was Col. Bascom. A trifle grayer, a little more careworn, but the same genial gentleman.

"'Bless me!' he cried, almost squeezing my hands off, 'is it really you, captain? We heard you were killed in the fighting around Petersburg. Dear me! How glad I am to see you. But, wait a minute; I'm looking for Gladys. Did you see anything of her on your train? I came to meet her.'

"Of course, I hadn't seen her!

"Just then someone touched me very gently on the arm and a voice—that voice—said with a note that was between a laugh and a tear:

"'Capt. Williamson, allow me to return your watch!' And I knew in a minute that I hadn't forgotten—that I couldn't forget."

An ineffable look came into the veteran's face and he paused.

"Well?" suggested the listener, rather impatiently.

"What is there to well about? It's time to hear old Gordon. There comes my wife to remind me of the fact. Gladys, my dear, this is my old comrade, Lieutenant McEwen, and he would like for you to tell him the time of day."

By that same token she knew that the veterans had been diving into the past; and that the captain's love-story had come to the fore.

When He Was Twenty-One.

There is a young criminal lawyer in this city who, on the occasion of his becoming of age, began the celebration of his birthday in a way that caused his household a great deal of consternation. On the eve of the fete, shortly after midnight, the young man's family were suddenly startled from their slumbers by a loud voice in the house calling, "There's a man in the house! There's a man in the house!" The valiant pater familias rushed from his room, bearing in his hands a heavy billet of fire wood, to learn the cause of the disturbance and to capture the intruder. His son was standing in the hall, shouting at the top of his voice. "Where's the man?" exclaimed the old gentleman. "Here, sir; here!" proudly replied the young man. "This is he At last I'm 21!"—Memphis Scimitar.

Houses and Offices Too Hot.

To begin with, we keep our houses and business offices too hot. Not one home or office in a thousand is kept at a sensible temperature. We sit in the high temperature, and then the moment we stir out we are chilled and get cold.

We are so sensitive to cold, thanks to artificial conditions, that we dress too warmly, pamper our bodies. In order, as we think, to be comfortable out of doors, we pile on blankets and thick clothing, where the rooms are so warm that gauze pjamas would be the only appropriate wear. We get overheated, perspire, make ourselves as sensitive as hot-house plants, and, when we do go out of doors, after smothering ourselves in outside wraps, we suffer horribly from cold. Of course, we do. If we could get used to a cold, bracing temperature in the house, the outdoor air would have no terror for us. There would be no chill, no gooseflesh, no taking cold, and we wouldn't need to be swathed like Egyptian mummies.

Watch the Humorist.

"The features of the human face," said Mark Twain, the other day, "can readily be compelled into a kaleidoscope of contortions, running the gamut from the expression of intense delight to the expression of excruciating agony. You will never wholly realize this, however, until you have the opportunity of watching a humorist in the throes of turning out a 'side-splitter.'"—New York Times.

Business.

"So you won't let me play 'Hamlet?'" said Mr. Stormington Barnes.

"Emphatically, no!" answered the manager.

"You have no respect for the character of the great Dane?"

"Now, my dear Storm!" was the soothing rejoinder, "what does the public care about great Danes? What they want is the bloodhounds in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'"—Washington Star.

THE CHILDREN ENJOY

Life out of doors and out of the games which they play and the enjoyment which they receive and the efforts which they make, comes the greater part of that healthful development which is so essential to their happiness when grown. When a laxative is needed the remedy which is given to them to cleanse and sweeten and strengthen the internal organs on which it acts, should be such as physicians would sanction, because its component parts are known to be wholesome and the remedy itself free from every objectionable quality. The one remedy which physicians and parents, well-informed, approve and recommend and which the little ones enjoy, because of its pleasant flavor, its gentle action and its beneficial effects, is—Syrup of Figs—and for the same reason it is the only laxative which should be used by fathers and mothers.

Syrup of Figs is the only remedy which acts gently, pleasantly and naturally without griping, irritating, or nauseating and which cleanses the system effectually, without producing that constipated habit which results from the use of the old-time cathartics and modern imitations, and against which the children should be so carefully guarded. If you would have them grow to manhood and womanhood, strong, healthy and happy, do not give them medicines, when medicines are not needed, and when nature needs assistance in the way of a laxative, give them only the simple, pleasant and gentle—Syrup of Figs.

Its quality is due not only to the excellence of the combination of the laxative principles of plants with pleasant aromatic syrups and juices, but also to our original method of manufacture and as you value the health of the little ones, do not accept any of the substitutes which unscrupulous dealers sometimes offer to increase their profits. The genuine article may be bought anywhere of all reliable druggists at fifty cents per bottle. Please to remember, the full name of the Company—CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.—is printed on the front of every package. In order to get its beneficial effects it is always necessary to buy the genuine only.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

The News acknowledges the receipt of a congressional directory of the 57th congress from Senator M. E. Clapp.

The report comes from Washington that the pine lands around Cass Lake will not be opened up by congress this session. The people of Cass Lake have made a gallant fight against big odds.

The financial statement published in this issue is a complete and comprehensive statement of what has been done last year in the county, and tells just how every cent of the county's money has been expended.

The fact that Senator Nelson is one of the most influential men in Washington was proven by the passage of his bill for a department of commerce and labor. The need of such a department was abundantly demonstrated.

The statement in the Warren Register to the effect that Marshall county will support any Republican for senator that Kittson county unanimously presents greatly improves Mr. Grindland's fences in the sixty-third senatorial district.

The Thief River Falls Commercial Club has issued a Red Lake Reservation booklet—but Red Lake Falls isn't on the map. The puerile spirit thus exhibited is amusing if nothing else.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Red Lake Falls will be entitled to a place on the map when John King succeeds in electing the editor of the Gazette a state senator.

The citizens of Thief River Falls are not among the dreamy eyed ones who are satisfied with what they can squeeze out of the present or with visionary hopes of what the future may bring forth, but a rustle is heard as of the growing pains of a metropolis. One and all, her citizens endeavor to forward the interests of the city with as much energy as though it was his own private affair. Now they are to send an ambassador to Washington, at the expense of the city, to induce the government to open up the reserve to settlement. Now they are after the big woolen mills at Fosston. Such incessant effort is what tells.—Kittson County Posten.

A Hutchinson pastor in the Independent-Times discusses a common ailment thusly: "The big head" is a popular way of expressing a common and frequent ailment with some people, it arises from various sources but the real foundation is the lack of sense. A little money develops it in some people; a little office, where a chance is given to exercise a little authority is often the cause of it, while others get it by having a little better job than their associates. The truth is, no sensible person gets the 'big head.' You will invariably find that those persons who become stuck up and stiffnecked from sources of any kind are weak in their intellectual caliber.

THE NEWS.

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

The News acknowledges the receipt of a congressional directory of the 57th congress from Senator M. E. Clapp.

The report comes from Washington that the pine lands around Cass Lake will not be opened up by congress this session. The people of Cass Lake have made a gallant fight against big odds.

The financial statement published in this issue is a complete and comprehensive statement of what has been done last year in the county, and tells just how every cent of the county's money has been expended.

The fact that Senator Nelson is one of the most influential men in Washington was proven by the passage of his bill for a department of commerce and labor. The need of such a department was abundantly demonstrated.

The statement in the Warren Register to the effect that Marshall county will support any Republican for senator that Kittson county unanimously presents greatly improves Mr. Grindland's fences in the sixty-third senatorial district.

Red Lake Falls will be entitled to a place on the map when John King succeeds in electing the editor of the Gazette a state senator.

The citizens of Thief River Falls are not among the dreamy eyed ones who are satisfied with what they can squeese out of the present or with visionary hopes of what the future may bring forth, but a rustle is heard as of the growing pains of a metropolis. One and all, her citizens endeavor to forward the interests of the city with as much energy as though it was his own private affair. Now they are to send an ambassador to Washington, at the expense of the city, to induce the government to open up the reserve to settlement. Now they are after the big woolen mills at Fosston. Such incessant effort is what tells.—Kittson County Posten.

A Hutchinson pastor in the Independent-Times discusses a common ailment thusly: "The big head" is a popular way of expressing a common and frequent ailment with some people, it arises from various sources but the real foundation is the lack of sense. A little money develops it in some people; a little office, where a chance is given to exercise a little authority is often the cause of it, while others get it by having a little better job than their associates. The truth is, no sensible person gets the 'big head.' You

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

The News acknowledges the receipt of a congressional directory of the 57th congress from Senator M. E. Clapp.

The report comes from Washington that the pine lands around Cass Lake will not be opened up by congress this session. The people of Cass Lake have made a gallant fight against big odds.

The financial statement published in this issue is a complete and comprehensive statement of what has been done last year in the county, and tells just how every cent of the county's money has been expended.

The fact that Senator Nelson is one of the most influential men in Washington was proven by the passage of his bill for a department of commerce and labor. The need of such a department was abundantly demonstrated.

The statement in the Warren Register to the effect that Marshall county will support any Republican for senator that Kittson county unanimously presents greatly improves Mr. Grindland's fences in the sixty-third senatorial district.

Red Lake Falls will be entitled to a place on the map when John King succeeds in electing the editor of the Gazette a state senator.

The citizens of Thief River Falls are not among the dreamy eyed ones who are satisfied with what they can squeese out of the present or with visionary hopes of what the future may bring forth, but a rustle is heard as of the growing pains of a metropolis. One and all, her citizens endeavor to forward the interests of the city with as much energy as though it was his own private affair. Now they are to send an ambassador to Washington, at the expense of the city, to induce the government to open up the reserve to settlement. Now they are after the big woolen mills at Fosston. Such incessant effort is what tells.—Kittson County Posten.

A Hutchinson pastor in the Independent-Times discusses a common ailment thusly: "The big head" is a popular way of expressing a common and frequent ailment with some people, it arises from various sources but the real foundation is the lack of sense. A little money develops it in some people; a little office, where a chance is given to exercise a little authority is often the cause of it, while others get it by having a little better job than their associates. The truth is, no sensible person gets the 'big head,' You will invariably find that those persons who become stuck up and stiffnecked from sources of any kind are weak in their intellectual caliber.

HE HAS WON.

Mayor Kratka Successful in His Fight at Washington.

The following, which explains itself, appeared in the Sunday issue of the Pioneer Press.

Washington, Feb. 8.—Mayor F. H. Kratka of Thief River Falls, Minn., is elated over the action of the secretary of the interior in issuing an order directing Inspector McLaughlin to proceed to Minnesota and treat with the Chippewas for a cession of the lands on the Western portion of the Red Lake Reservation.

Mr. Kratka was sent here by the Commercial club of that city to bring about this result. Inspector McLaughlin will return to the state with him.

The lands which it is proposed to open to settlement comprise 257,036 acres near Thief River Falls. The Indians will be offered about $2.50 an acre, and this is the price that will be paid to the government for the lands by settlers.

Inspector McLaughlin will be directed to expedite negotiations, in order that a treaty may be submitted to congress for action before adjournment.

Just when Mr. Kratka will return is hard to say, but friends in this city have receivep letters from him stating that he will not return until Inspector McLaughlin comes with him, and it is thought that he will arrive here next week.

When the inspector arrives it will be the duty of the citizens of Thief River Falls to assist him in every possible way. The Indians are all in favor of disposing of the land at $2.50 per acre, it is said and it is thought that there will be but little trouble in making a treaty.

SHAW'S PURE MALT has a marvelous dietetic value. While refreshing and pleasant to take, it helps assimilation of food; sold by John Morgan.

Court Convened Monday at Red Lake Falls.

Court convened Monday at Red Lake Falls. There are a large number of cases to be tried, but most of them will undonbtedly be postponed, as there are so many cases of small pox in the southern end of the county that it is almost impossible to secure witnesses.

The case of Adams against the city of Thief River Falls will be tried today, and that is about the only case of any importance to the people of this section of the county.

Among those from this city attending court are: Attorneys McIntyre, Lee, Richardson and Mabey, and S. Kenson, R. J. McDonald, A. Wright, Henry Knutson, Geo. Turville, M. K. Wall, James Meehan, J. Feiman, John Burkee, Anton Langseth, Ed Evenson, W. C. Smiley, John Kivel, Dr. Grandy, Mrs. John Morin, Wm. Benzie.

ISOLATED TRACTS.

Congressman Eddy Introduced a Bill For Sale of Isolated Tracts.

On the 16th of last month Mayor Campbell wrote to Hon. Frank M. Eddy calling his attention to the fact that under the present law the department could not dispose of isolated tracts of land upon the lands opened to settlement on the Red Lake and White Earth reservations and requested that he have the law governing the sale of isolated tracts of land extended to these lands.

Today Mr. Campbell is in receipt of a letter from Mr. Eddy in which he states he has introduced a special bill providing for the sale of these isolated tracts of land and will try and have the bill reported by the committee on public lands at an early date.

The passage of this bill will enable the farmers on the reservation lands to increase their holdings by the purchase of adjoining small tracts of lands and thus be able to use the land for agricultural purposes.—Crookston Times.

HOT SPRINGS

An Interesting Letter from Leonard Peterson.

Hot Springs, Ark.—Editor of the NEWS: I am now in the city of "Vapors" and thought it would perhaps interest some of your readers to hear something from this famous health resort, the modern Bethesda of our days.

The weather has been very fine here until last week, when it commenced to rain, winding up with a severe sleet and snow storm; but the sun is shining bright again and the snow is disappearing fast. But to turn from weather and wind in order to convey some idea of the famous "Hot Spring," the Valley of Vapors" one finds himself saying when from every spring and open faucet there ascends a small cloud of vapor, for the water is hot, having an average temperature of 135 degrees Fahr. you drink it, enjoy it and yearn for more. Nine hundred acres in the city of Hot Springs are owned and controlled by the U. S. government. Within this reservation is the mountain from whence flow 830000 gal. of hot water, daily, 46 springs being located on the side of the mountain which is known as Hot Springs Mountain 40 of these supply the baths and drinking purposes. The question naturally arises, "What benefits accrue from the use of this water in form of bath or drinking." The answer may be best obtained from the government circular issued by surgeon General Sternberg U. S. A. Relief may be reasonably expected from the use of the waters at "Hot Springs" in the following conditions rheumatism and gout in the various forms, Neuralgia, mettallic or malarial, poisoning paralysis, the earlier stage of locomotor ataxia, chronic Brights, Disease in the early stage only, and other diseases of the Urinary organs, functional disease of the liver gastri cdyspepsia, chronic diarrhea catarrhal effection of the digestive and respiratory organs, chronic and skin disease. The Hot Sprngs continue to add to its reputation as health a resort every year and thousands of people from all over the globe come here in search of health, for as long as disease and pain rack the human body the search of health and alleviation will continue. The wisdom of the retention, control and supervision of this wonderful water by the National Government has been fully demonstrated, the springs are now the property of the people free from monopoly and extortion and within reach of all, the price ranging from $3.00 to 10.00 for 21 baths. The government has also built a free bath house where those who are unfortunately poor may avail themselves of the water free of charge. In addition to the government bath houses there are 23 bath houses owned by individuals and corporations, these are under government supervision and the rates charged are fixed by the secretary of the interior. The scale of prices is in accordance with the euipment and accommodations.

The city of Hot Springs is located in a velley, surrounded on all sides by high hills and mountains, Pine and other trees grow in abundance on the mountain sides It has a population of about 10000, but during the bathing season this is more than doubled. The estimated number of visitors during the year ending June 30th 1901 was 55000 and total number of baths during the year 673,921. Solid through trains are run from St. Louis to Hot Springs over the St. Louis Iron Mountain and Southern R. R. in connection with the Little Rock and Hot Springs and Western.

Through sleepers are now run from various cities making easy travel from all parts of the country. The hotel accommodations are very good, there being about 100 hotels where accommodation can be had from $1.00 $60.00 a week. Most prominent among them are the Arlington, Eastman and Park Hotels representing an investment of over 2,000,000 dollars.

GOV. VAN SANT'S MESSAGE

REVIEWS NEW TAX CODE AND MERGER SUIT

Governor Urges Legislators to Adopt New Tax Laws Without Delay—Makes Recommendations—Call Attention to Northern Securities Company.

To the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives:

You have been called together in extraordinary session for the purpose of receiving the report of the tax commission appointed pursuant to your enactment at the last session, and for taking action upon the measures proposed by the said commission.

It is a matter of common knowledge that for many years there has been a universal demand in our state for a commission clothed with the duty of preparing more efficient tax laws. The creation of such a commission has long been urged by the public press, has been recommended by many of my predecessors, and earnestly advocated by our state auditor, whose duties in tax matters make him especially familiar with the defects of our present tax system.

Your body was practically unanimous in approving the bill providing for a commission, there being only eight votes recorded against it, four in the house and four in the senate. In order to have the measures proposed by the commission effective during the present year, the act provided that the commission should complete its work prior to the first of the present month.

In compliance with the law, the commission filed its report, together with certain proposed measures. In order that the report might be considered and its measures enacted into laws as soon as possible, you adjourned the last regular session before the constitutional limitation in order that the subject matter of the report of the commission and the measures proposed might be taken up in extra session without additional expense to the state.

Owing to the urgent necessity of more effective tax legislation it was tacitly understood that if your general session was shortened you would be called together in extraordinary session immediately after the report of the commission, for the purpose of affording an early opportunity to consider the measures proposed, and to enact such laws as you might deem just and wise. Pursuant to the understanding stated, and in accord with your purpose, and deeming the work of the commission most thorough and complete, I issued my proclamation convening your honorable body at this time.

Duties of Tax Commission.

Pursuant to your enactment the following citizens of our state were appointed as tax commissioners, to wit: Hon. W. J. Hahn, Hon. H. W. Childs and Hon. G. S. Ives. The duties of the commission were specifically set out in the act as follows:

"The duties of said commission shall be to make a tax code for the State of Minnesota. Such code shall include a complete system for the just and equitable taxation of all forms of property, both tangible and intangible, and shall be properly indexed and prepared in the form of a bill or bills for presentation to the legislature. Such code shall include provisions for a permanent tax commission, and shall define its duties, powers and compensation. The commission shall also prepare a report and bill or bills providing for any constitutional amendments which may be necessary for properly carrying out the systems of taxation recommended by the commission."

Realizing the magnitude of the task and the limited time prescribed, the commissioners immediately commenced their work upon receiving their appointments. For nine months they labored incessantly; they visited other states and familiarized themselves with the tax laws there in vogue; they also visited many portions of our own state, thereby obtaining much information of value. After becoming thoroughly familiar with the tax laws of other states, and the defects of our own system, they set earnestly to work in the preparation of the proposed measures now so familiar to all of you. That their work has been done faithfully and conscientiously cannot be gainsaid, and for the earnest, honest and impartial discharge of their duties they are entitled to the unstinted praise of the people of our state. The gentlemen composing this commission are lawyers of eminent ability and have in the past occupied such public positions as fitted them especially for the onerous burdens which they assume. These facts suggest most emphatically the wisdom of carefully considering their work done and refraining from criticism until their proposed measures are thoroughly understood. It must be borne in mind that limitations were placed upon the commissioners by the constitution. This fact made their duties particularly exacting, and that you may fully understand the difficulties under which they labored I refer you to their report which accompanies the bills proposed by them.

Meet the Issue Now.

That the measures proposed are perfect, no one will claim; even the commissioners assert that a more satisfactory code might be framed were it not for constitutional limitations. Nevertheless, that the measures proposed are an improvement over the present inefficient system of taxation will not be doubted for a moment. I am aware of the fact that opposition to the adoption of the measures has arisen, and has occasioned many suggestions looking to the defeat of the measures or the postponement of their consideration. In my judgment it is wise to meet the issue now. To temporize will simply amount to deferring the consideration of the very questions which now confront us. No time will ever be more opportune than the present to meet this great question of taxation so important to the welfare of our state.

If in your judgment the bill is defective, let it be amended. If too drastic, let it be changed. Counsel among yourselves earnestly and candidly, and make whatever changes your wisdom dictates is proper. The suggestion that the matter of legislation be delayed until the constitutional limitations be removed does not commend itself to my judgment, for we have no assurance that the people will ever remove these limitations. Past experience demonstrates that so large a percentage of our people persistently fail to vote upon constitutional amendments, as to make submission quite uncertain. Hence, deferring this important matter will in all probability simply delay the consideration of the issue which now confronts you.

If the bill proposed is passed by you, and subsequently the constitutional limitations are moved, then the law can be so amended as to conform to the new conditions. The primary purpose of tax legislation is to compel all property to bear its just burden of taxation, except, of course, such as public policy suggests should be exempt. There should be no discrimination. The property of all should be treated alike. Laws should be so framed that every dollar of the man of means should respond to taxation the same as every piece of property of his less wealthy neighbor.

Poor Bear the Burden.

Under our present system the comparatively poor of our state bear more of the burden of taxation than the wealthier classes. Such conditions should no longer exist. It is largely due to the fault of our system. The greatest evil of taxation is the inequality of the burden. I have sufficient faith in human nature to believe that every man will ungrudgingly pay his share of taxes if he is satisfied that his neighbor does likewise. The evident intention of the commission in framing this bill was to so provide that taxation should rest alike upon the shoulders of all. It is therefore, in my judgment, imperative that you meet these conditions frankly, fearlessly and without delay. The code reported by the commission will go very far to correct these deplorable existing conditions.

During your last session it was conceded by all that our tax laws should be corrected. Many of the other states have taken up this important subject and compiled laws far in advance of those which now control us. Let us not be behind the other states of the Union, but imitate their prudence by meeting the tax issue now. This code, we are advised, embraces the best efforts and wisdom of other states which have framed tax codes with a view to full, equal and just taxation.

Let your purpose be to so legislate that taxes may be apportioned in a fair and equitable manner to all classes and kinds of property. It is not my purpose to analyze the proposed code in detail. I commend it to you as a vast improvement over our present inefficient sysbe heard, and no injustice should be done to any industry or to any individual. The large interests of our state will probably be represented and seek a hearing, but we must bear in mind that the man who has for years uncomplainingly paid his share and more of taxes cannot appear; but his rights as a citizen and taxpayer should nevertheless be considered. The best way to aid him is to see to it that all who have contributed too little or have escaped altogether pay their full share, and in that event his burden will be lessened.

It is confidently predicted that the enactment of this code will result in largely increasing the assessment in our state. If so, the rate of taxation will be materially decreased, and if those who oppose the listing of all property at its full money value will bear in mind that as assessment increases the rate decreases, less opposition will be heard. This, however, suggests a matter which certainly calls for your most earnest consideration. The issuance of bonds by municipalities is limited to a percentage of existing local assessments. If you so legislate that assessments will be materially increased, then you should consider the advisability of enacting a measure which will prevent the corresponding increase of municipal bonded indebtedness.

Would Raise Exemptions.

I would recommend that an amendment be made placing the exemption on personal property at $100, as it has been for many years. This will be especially beneficial to the people of small means. This suggestion, I am advised, meets with the approval of the tax commission.

I would also suggest that the bill be so amended as to require the listing of property on May 1 rather than April 1, for the reason that the time to prepare for putting into operation the new code, if it passes, probably will be too limited to make the necessary preparations.

Our grain men express the fear that the proposed code if put into operation, would be against their interests, and drive their business into Wisconsin. By making the date of listing the same as in that state, and exempting all grain in interstate transit, although temporarily stored in elevators, would place these interests upon an equal footing with those of our sister state. This, in my judgment, should be done. All other grain except that in interstate transit is assessed and taxed in Wisconsin as other personal property, on May 1. This suggestion, I am also advised, meets with the approval of the tax commission.

Tonnage Tax.

The proposed code provides for the repeal of the vessel tonnage tax. In this respect allow me to make the following suggestions:

Every good citizen takes pride in the commercial advancement of his state. It should be our policy to foster tendencies which promise greater wealth and prosperity to any section of the state. Although remote geographically from the seaboard, it is apparent, unless prevented by legislation, that this state may soon outstrip many of her rivals in the magnitude of her shipping interests. The registration of vessels navigating international waters at the port of Duluth indicates that it is a favorite port. When we bear in mind that interstate tonnage is beyond the taxing power of the state, and that the revenues derived from a tonnage tax upon vessels must always greatly exceed what would arise from any other method applied to that class of property, it is apparent that the subject is one which calls for your most careful consideration. I trust, therefore, that you will be able to enact legislation which, while not in violation of the constitution, will preserve to the state advantages already gained, and present no impediment to the growth of our influence over navigation upon the Great Lakes.

By request of the commission to revise our general laws I submit the following:

Inasmuch as chapter 241 of the Laws of 1901, providing for the appointment by the justices of the supreme court of commissioners to revise, codify and annotate the existing general laws, expressly excludes from their consideration "statutes on the subject of taxation," and as it is desirable that the revision, when completed, should contain all public laws, appropriately arranged, it would seem advisable that such legislation be had as will be conducive to that end. It is obvious also that the work of the commissioners is of such character that it should not be unduly hurried. The legislation of the past thirty-five years has reached an enormous bulk, much of which is now obsolete, and, on many subjects, redundant and contradictory. Only the most patient research and painstaking labor can reduce it to that harmony which the public interests require. That the work may be continued in such manner as to accomplish the best results, action should be taken at the present session. The commissioners will submit for your consideration some suggestions on the subject, to which I invite your attention.

The entire matter now rests with you. It is for you to decide whether the work of your tax commission will be vain or not. I trust, and have faith to believe, that your deliberations will result in great good to the state, and that a tax law will be placed upon the statute books that will equal, if not surpass, that of any other state in the Union.

I am advised that the members of the tax commission, if desired, will at all times during your session be ready and willing to respond to your call and give you whatever assistance and information you may request.

Northern Securities Company.

At this time I desire to inform the legislature of the suit brought by the State of Minnesota against the Northern Securities Company of New Jersey. Believing that this corporation was organized for the purpose of evading and violating the laws of the State of Minnesota by consolidating the properties of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railway companies, which companies own parallel and competing lines of railway within the state, I requested Attorney General Douglas to bring suit in the name of the state to prevent such consolidation. That such consolidation is against the law is clearly shown by reference to our statutes. I quote from sections 2716 and 2717 of our General Statutes:

"Sec. 2716. No railroad corporation shall consolidate with, lease or purchase, or in any way become owner of or control any other railroad corporation, or any stock, franchises, rights or property thereof, which owns or controls a parallel or competing line.

"Sec. 2717. No railroad corporation, or the lessees, purchasers or managers of any railroad corporation, shall consolidate the stock, property or franchises of, or in any way control any other railroad corporation owning or having under its control a parallel or competing line, nor shall any officer of such railroad corporation act as an officer of any other railroad corporation owning or having the control of a parallel or competing line."

These laws have not only been held to be constitutional by the supreme court of the United States, but also to declare a wise public policy.

Purpose Is Merger.

That the Northern Securities company can, and if not prevented by the courts will, merge or consolidate the lines and properties of the two railway companies under one management is evidenced by reference to sections 3 and 4 of the articles of incorporation of the Northern Securities company, which authorize this corporation "To purchase, hold, sell assign, transfer, mortgage, pledge or otherwise dispose of shares of the stock of any other corporation or corporations, association or associations of the State of New Jersey, or any other state, territory or country, and while owner of such stock to exercise all the rights, powers and privileges of ownership, including the right to vote thereon. To aid in any manner any corporation or association of which any bonds or other securities or evidences of indebtedness or stock are held by the corporation; and to do any acts or things designed to protect, preserve, improve or enhance the value of any such bonds or other securities or evidences of indebtedness or stock."

These powers are as broad as language can make them, and authorize the Northern Securities company not only to vote the stock of our state, I deemed it wise to call a conference of the governors and attorneys general of the states through which these lines of railway pass, in order that such method of procedure might be adopted as would be uniform. This conference was held at Helena, Mont. There were present the governors and attorneys general not only of our state, but of Montana, South Dakota and Idaho, and the attorney general of Washington. The governor of the last-named state died just prior to the conference, and owing to this fact his successor, Gov. McBride, was unable to attend. Gov. McBride, however, has since, in a published interview, called the attention of the people of his state to the dangers threatened by the consolidation of these two companies. The conference was harmonious throughout, and that the official representatives of the various states were wholly in sympathy with the action of this state and its determination to oppose this consolidation is shown by the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"In our opinion the consolidation or threatened consolidation of the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Burlington railway systems in the several states through which they run as parallel and competing lines is contrary to sound public policy, and also, with the exception of Idaho, is in violation of the constitution or laws of said states, and mindful of the obligation which the law imposes in such cases upon the officials of the several states here represented, we hereby give our unqualified approval and indorsement to any proper and suitable proceeding which may be instituted in any court having jurisdiction by the sovereign State of Minnesota, or any other state affected thereby designated, designed and intended to speedily and finally test and determine the validity of such consolidation or threatened consolidation. And further, we unanimously protest against any combination or consolidation which restricts or stifles free competition in the trade or commerce of the country."

Suit in Supreme Court.

It was determined, owing to the importance of the case, and for the purpose of getting the matter disposed of at as early a date as possible, to bring the suit in the supreme court of the United States in the first instance. The question of original jurisdiction in that court was argued on Jan. 27, 1902, by Attorney General Douglas and one of his associate counsel, Hon. M. D. Munn. The application to file the bill was opposed by the Northern Securities company, and some of the ablest corporation lawyers in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania appeared in behalf of that corporation. If the supreme court does not take jurisdiction it is the intention of the attorney general to at once bring suit in the state courts, and every effort will be made to speedily have the case reached in the court of last resort, where it must finally be disposed of. Neither this company, nor any other company, combination, consolidation or trust shall violate the laws of our state if it can be prevented.

What the final decision will be it is difficult to foretell, but it does not seem possible that a New Jersey corporation, no matter what its capitalization, will be permitted to violate the laws of the sovereign State of Minnesota. If the final decision should be against the state the battle is not then lost. There is one remedy that never fails and which is more supreme even than the supreme court. I quote the words of Judge Brewer in an address made at the bi-centennial of Yale college, in which he said, speaking of trusts and the inability of the courts to crush them, "Appeal must be taken to the great court of public opinion, whose decrees are irresistible. In that court every man is counsel and every man is judge."

Commends Attorney General.

It is a pleasure to commend Attorney General Douglas for the able and efficient manner in which he has endeavored to vindicate our laws. I learn from him that the enactments upon our statute books, and which are quoted above are ample, and that no additional legislation is required at this time, but if, during your session, any further legislation should be needed I will immediately communicate such fact to you. While you have been called together solely for the purpose of considering the tax code, yet in view of the extraordinary expenses attending this suit, and the great array of legal talent in opposition, I would suggest that a sufficient sum of money be placed at the disposal of the legal department to employ associate counsel to properly continue the litigation and meet the expenses necessarily connected therewith.

Before closing I desire to congratulate you upon the splendid record made during the last session. You received, and justly merited, the approval of the people of your state. Your acts were uniformly in the interest of the commonwealth you so loyally represent. I doubt not that your deliberations and acts during this session will be equally meritorious, and that you will again receive the approval of a grateful public.

DETECTING BAD MONEY.

Bank Clerks Identify It, Often Without Comprehending Just Why.

It seems wonderful to the casual observer that cashiers, bank tellers and others who handle large amounts of paper money are able, at a glance, to detect a bad note. Exactly what it is that does expose the counterfeit the best experts find it difficult to tell. They say they know it instinctively. They judge not only by the looks of the note, but by the "feel" of it. It is obvious that a counterfeit note must be widely circulated to make it profitable. No sooner does a counterfeit appear than its description is widely published. Those who are likely to suffer by taking counterfeit notes make it their business to be on the lookout for new ones, which are soon distinguishable by some easily discovered mark.

A teller knows of just what denomination are the counterfeits, and just where to look for the telltale marks. He detects the spurious notes as easily as the reader does a misspelled word. It is no particular effort. It is a habit. The principal reason why counterfeits are so easily detected is because in some feature they are almost uniformly of inferior quality. This is, indeed, the main protection of the public. Genuine notes are engraved and printed almost regardless of cost, and the very best materials are used in the engraving and printing. It is done in large establishments, with costly materials, and by the best workmen. It is practically impossible for counterfeiters to do as well. They must work in secret and at a disadvantage, and of necessity cannot have the experience to produce such perfect work. If they get the engravings done nicely they fail in the printing, of if they get the engraving and printing done well they fail in securing the proper paper. Of late years there has been a great deal of care taken to get paper manufactured expressly for the notes issued by the government. The national bank notes are also issued by the government, so that the sources of supply for exactly that kind of paper are controlled.—Kansas City Star.

Rivals Scotch Granite.

Donegal now threatens the supremacy of Scotland in the matter of granite. Experts who have been paying extended visits of inspection in the neighborhood of Dungloe, in West Donegal, report immense formations of granite, which for variety of shade, durability and general beauty are said to rival the famous products of Aberdeen and Peterhead. The Dungloe granite, it is stated, embraces almost every variety of color and texture, the predominating shade being red and flesh-colored stones of medium and coarse grain. Of the familiar gray granite there is also a wonderful variety, comprising stones of all shades from the lightest to the darkest tones. Some of the finer grained rock has a light warm tone from the intermixed buff-colored felspar. A still more beautiful variety of stone which is found in Dungloe is the very dark micaceous granite, closely resembling the handsome "Labrador," with which many London buildings are pillared. When it is remembered that one firm alone in America imports £20,000 worth of polished granite yearly from Aberdeen, and that the demand for the highest class stone in all shades is ever on the increase, there should be thriving

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

Quite a Grist of Bills Creep Into the House.

St. Paul, Feb. 8.—Nine bills were introduced and three passed in the house yesterday morning, the most important measure being the senate bill appropriating $40,000 for the expenses of the extra session. The other bills passed fix the court terms in Jackson county and amend a technical error in a 1901 bridge bill.

The other new bills referred to the committee on reception include one by Representative Nyquist for the repeal of the 1901 dog tax law. Mr. Burns of Spring Valley wants to give local boards the right to waive poll taxes. Mr. Von Wald offered an amendment to the election law fixing the voting hours in the rural districts, and Mr. Alford of Duluth wants the primary law amended to except the Duluth school board from its operations.

WHAT IT MEANS.

The Fight Against the Merger Really a Magnates' War.

Republican politician of the Second district was a guest of the Saulspaugh last night, and he gave utterance to remarks that would leade a layman to believe that he did not take much stock in Gov. Van Sant's contest against the railroad kings. He said that, in his opinion, the fight now being waged was brought about by Thomas Lowry, W. D. Washburn and others, who are interested in the Soo and the Canadian Pacific roads. "Why, my boy," said the Second district man, "Private Secretary Robert Jamieson is a Minneapolis man, and he stands in with the Lowry-Washburn crowd. It was to Robert that these gentlemen told their tale of woe, and he stirred the governor up, and the result is the fight against the Northern Securities company. I do not believe that Gov. Van Sant conceived the idea of making the fight. In my opinion, it is a case of two railroads making a fight against two other roads, with the governor used as a tool."—Mankato Review.

THIRTY-SIX SUMMER SCHOOLS.

They Will Last Four Weeks and Be Held Before After N. E. A. Convention.

There will be thirty-six summer schools in Minnesota next summer. J. W. Olsen, state superintendent, has completed the list and selected the teachers, whose names will not be announced, however, until approved by county superintendents.

All sessions, including that at the university, will last four weeks. With a few exceptions they will begin July 14, after the meeting of the National Educational association in Minneapolis. Some will meet early in June, so as to close before the national event. There will be no summer schools in session during the convention.

In a number of cases counties will combine and hold a joint school. The list as prepared by Supt. Olsen is as follows:

Aitkin with St. Louis, Anoka with Hennepin, Becker at Detroit, Beltrami at Bemidji, Big Stone at Simpson Park, Blue Earth at Mankato, Carlton with St. Louis, Chippewa at Montevideo, Clay with Becker and Crow Wing at Brainerd, Dakota at Hastings, Douglas at Alexandria, Fillmore at Preston, Freeborn at Albert Lea, Goodhue at Red Wing, Grant at Elbow Lake, Hennepin at Minneapolis, Houston at Caledonia, Kanabec with Pine, Kandiyohi at Willmar, Kittson with Marshall, Lac qui Parle with Big Stone, Le Sueur at Le Sueur Center, Lyon at Marshall, Marshall at Argyle, Martin at Fairmont, Murray at Slayton, Norman at Ada, Olmsted at Rochester, Otter Tail at Fergus Falls, Pine at Pine City, Red Lake at Red Lake Falls, Rock at Luverne, St. Louis at Duluth, Sherburne at Elk River, Sibley at Arlington, Stearns at Sauk Center, Todd with Stearns, Traverse with Big Stone, Wabasha at Wabasha, Wadena at Wadena, Waseca at Waseca, Watonwan at Madelia, Winona at Winona, Wright at Buffalo.

FEW SMALLPOX CASES IN WOODS.

Lumbermen Obey Order of Health Department.

Dr. Bracken, secretary of the state board of health, returned from an extended investigation of smallpox conditions in the Minnesota lumber camps. Dr. Bracken visited Bertha, Bemidji, Walker, Park Rapids and other villages near which the camps are located.

"I found the conditions of the camps much better than in former years, and I think that there is less smallpox there now than at this time last year. The lumbermen generally are taking more effective precautions and are following more closely the directions of the board. The shanty bosses of some of the camps are required to make a careful inspection of the men every morning and report at headquarters with any man showing symptoms of the disease. The men infected are immediately taken to the smallpox hospitals.

"The authorities in Hubbard, Cass and Beltrami counties have established smallpox hospitals. Here the men from the lumber camps are taken and the camps are immediately attended to. In this way the camps are kept free from quarantine.

"I have received complaints against but one company which, it is said, is concealing smallpox from the health authorities and thereby helping to spread the disease. I have left instructions with the inspectors to be as strict as possible when they find lumbermen evading the law. The lumbermen who adopt such tactics will get no mercy from the health department."

WIN BUTTER PRIZES.

But Half a Point Separates Packages That Win First and Third Places.

The winners of the month's butter competition conducted by the state dairy and food department were announced by Commissioner McConnell. Thomas Moe, Winthrop, Sibley county, won the first prize, his butter scoring 95.5 points. A. P. Elmquist won second prize with 95.25 points; and the third prize went to M. P. Mortensen, Stockholm, Wright county. His butter scored 95 points. But half a point divided the first and third positions.

The competition included 137 packages of butter. The scoring this month was not as high as during the summer because the conditions incident to winter; the change in feeding and the housing of the cows affect the milk in a way that precludes the highest scoring. The workmanship of the buttermakers, however, was never better.

About forty of the packages were duplicated. These samples of butter will be placed in storage by the department and will be scored every thirty days to test their keeping qualities.

Wild Wolves Chase Driver.

Duluth, Minn., Feb. 5.—Wolf stories are getting pretty close to town. A small pack Sunday chased George Rohr of this city a distance of four miles, and only abandoned the pursuit when their prospective victim arrived at the Lakewood pumping station, nine miles east of the city. Mr. Rohr is a boilermaker in the employ of the Gogebic iron works. He was directed to hire a horse and cutter and go to one of Alger, Smith & Co.'s camps on the north short to repair a boiler on the company's logging road. He completed his work about dark and started immediately for home. Soon after leaving French river a number of wolves came up behind the cutter and demonstrated that they were out for prey. Mr. Rohr had a good horse and started him on the run. The animals drew very close at times, but hesitated about leaping into the cutter or attacking the horse, until, at the end of a four-mile run, the good horse and

Vessel Built for Egyptian King

The royal yacht in which Rameses and other ancient kings of Egypt made trips of state up and down the Nile thousands of years ago has been placed in the permanent collection of curios in the Carnegie Museum at Pittsburg, Pa.

The boat was dug out of the sand near the bed of the Nile last year and shipped to this country by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who presented it to the Pittsburg Carnegie Institute. In size and shape it does not differ materially from sailboats to be seen on inland waters to-day. In its building not a nail or screw was used. Heavy six-inch cedar timbers forming the hull are dove-tailed together in unique fashion—a trick in boat building known only to the ancients.

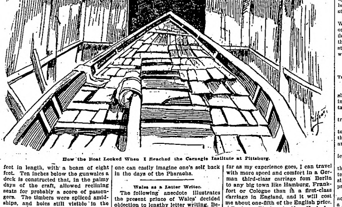
To a modern shipbuilder the yacht is a marvel of construction. It is thirty feet in length, with a beam of eight feet. Ten inches below the gunwales a deck is constructed that, in the palmy days of the craft, allowed reclining seats for probably a score of passengers. The timbers were spliced amidships, and holes still visible in the decaying wood indicate that rawhide thongs were used to draw the ends of the beams together. The boat draws three feet of water.

There are no evidences of rowlocks. In the stern are the remnants of a contrivance which probably did duty as a steering gear. A pole twelve feet long found with the boat may have been used as a mast to support the mainsail.

From the appearance of the ancient yacht it is evident that the old shipbuilders of the Nile did not depend on keels very much. Its bottom is as smooth as that of a saucer. However, when it is taken into consideration that the Nile is not a turbulent stream, the absence of a keel would not interfere with the yacht's good sailing qualities.

The wood of the hull is very well preserved. Although the timbers are decayed and worm-eaten, time has not been able in thousands of years to part the joints and seams that the Egyptian carpenters welded together. On the starboard side of the hull are the faint remains of hieroglyphic inscriptions.

The ancient craft does not differ greatly in form from the dahabiehs which are used upon the Nile to-day for carrying passengers. Every tourist who has been to Egypt is familiar with them. They are extremely agreeable vessels to ride in, and as one glides along the clear, placid Nile, in the exquisitely clear moonlight of Egypt, among its stupendous ruins, one can easily imagine one's self back in the days of the Pharaohs.



How the Boat Looked When I Reached the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg.

Wales as a Letter Writer.

The following anecdote illustrates the present prince of Wales' decided objection to lengthy letter writing. Before he sailed for his Australian tour on the Ophir he promised a friend that he would from time to time send him a long, newsy letter relating all the features of the voyage. Many weeks after the distinguished party had set sail and after the prince had been on Australian soil some time the friend received the following "long, newsy letter": "Dear ——, I promised you a long, chatty letter, didn't I? Well, now for it. Everything going famously. Grand country, Australia! Fine scenery; great hospitality. Good time everywhere and as happy as 'a duke on show' could wish to be. Will write you another long letter soon. Ever yours, George." After finishing the letter the prince is said to have remarked to the princess: "Won't our friends at home be pleased to get all the news I have told them in this letter?"

English Railway Service Poor.

In every respect the United States is superior to England—comparing like with like—but what is more notable, in Germany and France railway travel is cleaner, more speedy and cheaper. No week passes that I do not run out from London for country air, and whenever I find a train that reaches its destination on time I make a note of it as a strange thing. And as to overcrowding, I have frequently found myself in railway carriages wherein passengers have had to stand up all the way after having paid their fares. So far as my experience goes, I can travel with more speed and comfort in a German third-class carriage fom Berlin to any big town like Hamburg, Frankfort or Cologne than in a first-class carriage in England, and it will cost me about one-fifth of the English price.—Poultney Bigelow in New York Independent.

Official Expedition.

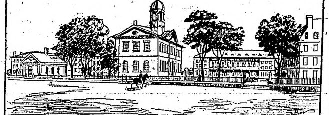
Wife of postmaster—Why weren't you home to dinner to-day?

Postmaster—Well, you see, I had a hurry call to Albany.

Wife—Didn't you know anything of it when you went away from the house this morning?

Postmaster—No; I didn't look at that letter you gave me to mail until I was half-way to the office, and when I saw it marked "in haste," of course I had to take the first train to the indicated destination and see that its instructions were obeyed.

HARVARD IN 1828



The above picture of Harvard university is taken from one of the earliest lithographs made in this country, in 1828. The drawing was made by A. G. Davis, a celebrated architectural draftsman of that time in Boston, and it was copied on the lithographic stone by William Pendleton, who was the first lithographer of any note in Boston, and for that matter in America.

The original print is a remarkably fine specimen of lithographic work when it is considered that the process of lithography although discovered by Senefelder thirty years previously, had not become to any extent available until a few years previous to the making of this picture. The print was published by Hilliard & Brown of Cambridge, and it speaks well for the enterprise of the Boston and Cambridge publishers of that day that they so quickly gave encouragement to the Pendletons in their introduction of the new process.

The drawing, although well made, has some of the perspective peculiarities of nearly all the drawings of that period. This is the old Harvard of Holmes, Lowell, Emerson and others. On the right is Massachusetts building, then comes the university building, which at that time had a front porch. Next is Harvard hall. Then comes the little rectangle with three trees, the largest of which is the tree around which some of the famous class-day exercises of yore were held. The two smaller trees have disappeared since that day. Then comes Holden chapel, behind which is Stoughton and Hollis; between these two a glimpse is had of Holworthy. The entrance to the yard in front of University is where the present Harvard gate stands. As will be noticed, the yard was rather sparse of trees in those days.

AROOSTOOK GIANT DEAD.

Feats of a Big Swede Who Has Just Succumbed to Fever in Maine.

Aroostook county's giant, John Brostrom of Woodland, is dead at the age of 32. Brostrom was a Swede, stood 6 feet 7 inches in his stocking feet and weighed, when in good health, 267 pounds.

There was not an ounce of fat on his huge frame. He was much the strongest man in northern Maine, and many stories are related of remarkable feats accomplished by him.

He once, by sheer strength, started a log jam that had for three days defied the efforts of twelve river drivers. On another occasion he carried on his shoulder to the mill a hardwood log that would have been a load for four ordinary men, had it sawed into boards and carried the boards strapped to his back a distance of two miles to his home.

Brostrom could lift barrels of potatoes into a high wagon with less effort than most men make to lift a bushel, and his services were in great demand at the raising of barns. He would pick up the heavy timbers like so many light joists and place them in their proper position while the others were getting ready to lift.

When there was a fire his flail-like arms would bring down the brakes of the hand tub on one side faster than four or five of the firemen could lift up on the other side, and the small boys said that he was as good as a steamer.

A fever carried the giant off, and all Woodland and the other Swedish colonists mourned. He died in a second-floor room, and his casket was so long that it could not be carried down the stairs and had to be taken out at a window.

GOT HIS SALMON CHEAP.

Trick by Which a London Fishmonger Was Taken In.

A gentleman entered a fishmonger's shop the other morning and after making a small purchase began a friendly talk with the proprietor.

"Do your lady customers give much trouble?" he inquired.

"Well, you know, they never want to give the price. It seems part of their nature to beat down everything," answered the fishmonger.

"My own experience—my own experience," remarked the stranger.

"Yes, I quite believe it, sir. Now, there's beautiful salmon at two-and-ten a pound. Were I to ask one-and-six a pound for it a woman would probably want it for a shilling!"

"Well, now, here's a lady coming across the street. Try it on, just for a joke. If she asks the price of salmon tell her one-and-six a pound.

The fishmonger agreed, and when the lady entered and made the desired inquiry he promptly answered:

"Very cheap, ma'am; only one-and six a pound."

"Then I'll take this one," she as promptly exclaimed, pointing to a twenty-pounder, and take it she did.

The gentleman disappeared at that moment. The fishmonger has since discovered they were husband and wife.—London Tit-Bits.

The Banshee's Warning.

This story is told as an experience in Ireland. "My brother and I went on one occasion with our nurse to see an old widow called Sally Noggin. While we were sitting talking to her we heard three loud and distinct knocks at the closed door of the cottage. We got up and opened it, but nobody was to be seen. The old woman burst forth into loud lamentations and howls and said that is was the banshee come to announce three deaths. We could not comfort her. Next morning we went to see her again and found that she had just been told of the death of her three sons, fishermen, who had been drowned that night by the capsizing of the boat in a storm and their bodies washed ashore. It was a very odd coincidence, for we certainly heard the knocks most clearly."

A Boom in Girls.

Dr. Schenk's theories on diet as determining sex, seem to have been exploded by remorseless fact, as so often happens to theories, says an English exchange. This has been a terrible year for babies of the feminine gender. The czarina and the queen of Italy have both given birth to daughters, in spite of ardent and universal prayers for sons; Lady Chelsea has recently had to submit to the arrival of a fifth daughter, instead of the ardently-hoped-for heir, and the young duchess of Manchester has added another small female to the preponderating number of women of the British Isles. Female babies are decidedly a "glut in the market" at present, and the general feeling in the families thus afflicted is of anything but the "welcome little stranger" order.

Magnets That Lift Tons.

The most important employment of the magnet in the mechanical industries is in lifting and handling such masses of metal as ship plates, boiler plates and parts of machines which it would otherwise be difficult to get hold of. It effects an average economy in time and cost of handling, stacking, loading and unloading of from 50 to 75 per cent. The type of magnets used

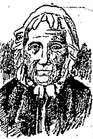
FAREWELL TO HIS FRIENDS.

Lincoln's Impressive Speech at Springfield on His Departure for Washington.

On the 11th of February, 1861, the arrangements for Mr. Lincoln's departure from Springfield were completed. It was intended to occupy the time remaining between that date and the 4th of March with a grand tour from state to state and city to city. One Mr. Wood, "recommended by Senator Seward," was the chief manager. He provided special trains to be preceded by pilot engines all the way through.

It was a gloomy day; heavy clouds floated overhead, and a cold rain was falling. Long before eight o'clock, a great mass of people had collected at the station of the Great Western railway to witness the event of the day. At precisely five minutes before eight, Mr. Lincoln, preceded by Mr. Wood, emerged from a private room in the depot building, and passed slowly to the car, the people falling back respectfully on either side, and as many as possible shaking his hands. Having finally reached the train, he ascended the rear platform, and, facing about to the throng which had closed around him, drew himself up to his full height, removed his hat, and stood for several seconds in profound silence. His eye roved sadly over that sea of upturned faces, and he thought he read in them again the sympathy and friendship which he had often tried, and which he never needed more than he did then. There was an unusual quiver in his lip, and a still more unusual tear on his shriveled cheek. His solemn manner, his long silence, were as full of melancholy eloquence as any words he could have uttered. What did he think of? Of the mighty changes which had lifted him from the lowest to the highest estate on earth? Of the weary road which had brought him to this lofty summit? Of his poor mother lying beneath the tangled underbrush in a distant forest? Of that other grave in the quiet Concord cemetery? Whatever the particular character of his thoughts, it is evident that they were retrospective and painful. To those who were anxiously waiting to catch words upon which the fate of the nation might hang, it seemed long until he had mastered his feelings sufficiently to speak. At length he began in a husky tone of voice, and slowly and impressively delivered his farewell to his neighbors. Imitating his example, every man in the crowd stood with his head uncovered in the fast-falling rain.

"Friends—No one who has never been placed in a like position can understand my feelings at this hour, nor the oppressive sadness I feel at this parting. For more than a quarter of a century I have lived among you, and during all that time I have received nothing but kindness at your hands. Here I have lived from my youth, until now I am an old man. Here the most sacred ties of earth were assumed. Here all my children were born; and here one of them lies buried. To you, dear friends, I owe all that I have, all that I am. All the strange, checkered past seems to crowd now upon my mind. To-day I leave you. I go to assume a task more difficult than that which devolved upon



MOTHER OF THE PRESIDENT

Washington. Unless the great God, who assisted him, shall be with and aid me, I must fail; but if the same omniscient mind and almighty arm that directed and protected him shall guide and support me, I shall not fail—I shall succeed. Let us all pray that the God of our fathers may not forsake us now. To him I commend you all. Permit me to ask, that, with equal security and faith, you will invoke his wisdom and guidance for me. With these few words I must leave you; for how long I know not. Friends, one and all, I must now bid you an affec-and touching eloquence, so exactly adapted to the occasion, so worthy of the man and the hour."

At 8 o'clock the train rolled out of Springfield amid the cheers of the populace. Four years later a funeral train, covered with the emblems of splendid mourning, rolled into the same city, bearing a discolored corpse, whose obsequies were being celebrated in every part of the civilized world.

Bowlin Greene's Funeral.

When Bowlin Greene, a lifelong friend, died, in 1842, Mr. Lincoln, then in the enjoyment of great local reputation, undertook to deliver a funeral oration over the remains of his beloved friend; but when he rose to speak, his voice was choked with deep emotion; he stood a few moments, while his lips quivered in the effort to form the words of fervent praise he sought to utter, and the tears ran down his yellow and shriveled cheeks. Some of those who came to hear him, and saw his tall form thus sway in silence over the body of Bowlin Greene, say he looked so helpless, so utterly bereft and pitiable, that every heart in the audience was hushed at the spectacle. After repeated efforts, he found it impossible to speak, and strode away, openly and bitterly sobbing, to the widow's carriage, in which he was driven from the scene. Bowlin Greene had loaned Mr. Lincoln books from their earliest acquaintance, and on one occasion had taken him to his home, and cared for him with the solicitude of a devoted friend through several weeks of great suffering and peril.

His Sense of Humor.

When Mr. Lincoln was postmaster at New Salem, Ill., his easy good nature was sometimes imposed upon by inconsiderate acquaintances; and one of the devices by which he sought to stop the abuse is related. "One Elmore Johnson, an ignorant but ostentatious, proud man, used to go to Lincoln's postoffice every day—sometimes three or four times a day, if in town—and inquire, 'Anything for me?' This bored Lincoln, yet it amused him. Lincoln fixed a plan—wrote a letter to Johnson as coming from a negress in Kentucky, saying many good things about opossum, dances, corn-shuckings, etc.; 'John's! come and see me, and old master won't kick you out of the kitchen any more!' Elmore took it out; opened it; couldn't read a word; pretended to read it; went away; got some friends to read it; they read it correctly; he thought the reader was fooling him, and went to others with the same result. At last he said he would get Lincoln to read it, and presented it to Lincoln. It was almost too much for Lincoln, but he read it. The man never asked afterwards, 'Anything here for me?'"

Lincoln's Sterling Honesty.

Lincoln possessed the judicial quality of mind in a degree so eminent, and it was so universally recognized, that he never could attend a horserace without being importuned to act as a judge, or witness a bet without assuming the responsibility of a stakeholder. "In the spring or summer of 1832," says Henry McHenry, "I had a horse race with George Warburton. I got Lincoln, who was at the race, to be a judge of the race, much against his will and after hard persuasion. Lincoln decided correctly; and the oth-

A GHASTLY CRIME

SAN FRANCISCO STARTLED BY A MURDER SIMILAR TO DURRANT CASE.

NAKED BODY OF A WOMAN FOUND

POSTURE AND CONDITION INDICATED THAT SHE HAD BEEN MURDERED.

EITHER STRANGLED OR POISONED

POLICE ARE AFTER A MAN WHO HAD BEEN SEEN WITH THE YOUNG LADY.

San Francisco, Feb. 11.—A mysterious murder resembling in some of its features the noted Durrant case is now puzzling the police department of this city. The body of Nora Fuller, a sixteen-year-old girl who disappeared from her home Jan. 11, was found lying naked on a bed in the upstairs back room of an unfurnished house at 2211 Sutter street yesterday. The girl had been dead some time as decomposition had begun. There was nothing in the house to indicate the means used to take her life, but the posture of the body and its condition, together with the disorder of the room, indicate that the girl was murdered. An autopsy disclosed that death was not due to natural causes. All the organs of the body are in normal condition. The general theory is that the girl was either strangled or poisoned. On both sides of the neck are discolorations which may have been Made by Finger Tips.

The city chemist is examining the stomach for evidences of poison. Nora Fuller left home Jan. 11, and met a man known as John Bennett in response to an advertisement for a girl to take care of a baby. She met the man at a restaurant, and thereafter all knowledge of her was lost. On Jan. 8 the house in which the body of the girl was found, was rented by a man giving the name of C. B. Hawkins. The general descriptions of Bennett and Hawkins tally, and it is thought that the two names were aliases of the same man. Both Bennett and Hawkins are said to have been thirty-five or forty years old, about six feet in height and weighing about 175 pounds. Each wore a brownish red mustache. Bennett wore clerical clothes and claimed to have studied for the ministry. The police are working on the theory that they were the same men. A possible motive for the murder is found in the suggestion that the murderer either quarreled with the girl, or feared his relations with her were about to become public.

CLOSE SQUEAK FOR DEWET.

Kitchener's Plans to Capture the Boer Leader Almost Succeeds.

London, Feb. 11.—From Wolvehock, Lord Kitchener yesterday telegraphed a long description of a combined movement of numerous British columns with the object of securing Gen. Dewet. Lord Kitchener says the advance the night of Feb. 4, the whole force moving from various directions and forming a continuous line of mounted men on the west bank of the Liebenbergs velt from Frankfort as far south as Fanny's Home and thence to Kaffirkof. The line then advanced to the west and the following night the British intrenched with their outposts fifty yards apart. They held the line from Holland to Doornkloof, while the columns were also working in advance of the blockhouse lines to prevent Dewet's crossing. The advance was continued Feb. 6, and Dewet was within the inclosure, but, recognizing his position, he ordered his men to disperse and seek safety during the night. Dewet himself, with some men and a number of cattle, made for the Kroonstadt-Lindley blockhouse line and at 1 o'clock in the morning, when it was very dark, by rushing his cattle at the fence, broke his way through the line mixed up with cattle and losing three men killed. Many attempts were made to break through the line on the night of Feb. 7, the line of outposts being attacked at various places throughout the night. But few escaped, and ten dead Boers were picked up in the morning near Heilbron.

SNOW STALLS TRAINS.

Hundreds of Soldiers and Passengers Are Stuck.

Oswego, N. Y., Feb. 11.—The Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg division of the New York Central is buried under tons of snow, and since Saturday six passenger trains have been stalled along the line. One between Pulaski and Fernwood has on board about 200 members of the Fifteenth United States Infantry, bound from Madison barracks, at Sackett's Harbor, to the Philippines, to take the place of the Ninth regiment, which has been ordered home. The men are provided with rations and the cars are so arranged that hot coffee can be made by attaching a contrivance to the steam pipes which heat the cars. There is another passenger train in a drift fourteen feet deep in Mexico. The New York express, from Chicago to New York, that should have left here Saturday morning at 11 o'clock, is stalled in the snow near Red Creek, about twenty-five miles west of this city.

Physician Requests for Extension of Furlough.

Kansas City, Feb. 11.—Gen. Frederick Funston's physician will forward a certificate to the war department stating his patient's condition and requesting that the general's leave of absence be extended three months.

"Gen. Funston cannot recover his normal strength under six months," said Dr. F. E. Robinson, who recently performed an operation upon the officer. "He should have comparative rest for some months yet. He should do duty in some capacity in this country, but in his present condition it might cause him serious injury to be returned to the Philippines."

Notwithstanding this statement, Dr. Robinson says Gen. Funston's condition has improved rapidly within the past few days.

RAID BY OFFICERS

SLOT MACHINES AND MONEY CONFISCATED IN COOK COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

GUNS PULLED ON CONSTABLES

OFFICIALS UNEXPECTEDLY SWOOP DOWN ON HAMMOND ILLINOIS.

ONE MAN BECOMES A BIG HERO

PULLED GUNS ON CONSTABLES, WHO THEN BEAT A HASTY RETREAT.

Hammond, Ind., Feb. 7. — Five Cook county constables yesterday swooped down on the saloons of West Hammond, Ill., and never in the history of that village has there been the excitement created that the Chicago constables stirred up. The raid was planned with considerable strategy, for the purpose of breaking up the slot machine traffic which infests the little city.

It has assumed startling proportions on account of the fact that the Hammond police and Lake county authorities across the line from West Hammond had long ago confiscated all the machines in Hammond, and the Lake county grand jury returned dozens of indictments against hotelkeepers and saloonmen for running the slot machines. This act on the part of the Hammond police drove the slot machines into Illinois, the city of Hammond and the town of West Hammond being practically one city. At 8 o'clock the Cook county constables drove into West Hammond, with two wagons and alighted at the Carl Heintz place, which is called Concordia Hall.

Heintz, being entirely unprepared, offered no resistance, but as soon as the officers of the law had left his place to hurry to the next saloon, he telephoned to his rivals in business and informed them officers were on their trail.

Then the trouble began. The five constables went into Frank Berwanger's State Line exchange, which stands just inside the Illinois line. They were confronted with Mrs. Berwanger, the proprietor's wife, who stood by the door in her hand, which she had been using. One of the constables drew his revolver and threatened to shoot the saloonkeeper unless he commanded his wife to lay down her weapon. While two officers covered the Berwangers, the others loaded up the slot machines.

Eight saloons were visited and the two wagons would only hold two more machines. The officers halted gleefully in front of William Yager's place on West State street, but as soon as they entered the saloon the burly form of the proprietor confronted them with two drawn revolvers. Yager vowed he would shoot them in their tracks if they budged a foot farther and the constables beat a hasty retreat.

"BEEF" EAGAN'S WILD TEMPER.

Fomer Commissary Challenged to a Duel.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 7.—Owing to a misunderstanding in Guaymas, Mexico, two American gentlemen became involved in a quarrel that led to a challenge to meet upon the field of honor.

One was Gen. Charles P. Eagan, who rode into prominence on embalmed beef, and the other Col. Willis P. Harlow of Nogales, an attorney with a national reputation. Eagan, who has been representing W. C. Greene in his legal contest regarding the Cobre Grande copper mines of Mexico, met Harlow at the hotel. The attorney, during the conversation, said: "General, I am representing Mr. Greene in that fight over the coal land, and I am going to see that you get off and stay off."

The infirmity of temper for which Eagan is justly celebrated knew no bounds at this outburst of frankness, causing a flow of language that dwarfs his former historic utetrances when Gen. Miles was the object. Under the tirade Harlow withdrew, but he penned a challenge, that was handed Gen. Eagan. Developments are awaited by the American colony upon the return of Harlow, who is reported in conference with Greene at Canana.

GERMANY IN SAD DISORDER.

Eagerness to Sell to Foreigners Is Over-Stimulated.

Berlin, Feb. 7.—The annual report of the trades guild, the chief corporation of business men in this city, fully confirms the statements regarding the distressed condition of trade in Germany. It states that the situation of industry and commerce was worse last year than in 1900. The purchasing power of the people had diminished and the number of workmen who had fallen out of employment was increasing steadily. There had been heavy losses in agriculture from the winter sowings and there had been a diminished harvest. Compared with the year 1899-1900 the exports from Germany had risen 470,000,000 marks; but the report adds that this is not so much due to success in foreign markets as to efforts to sell products to foreigners at any price in consequence of there being no demand at home. The report strongly advises the revision of the bourse regulations.

GOVERNMENT VICTORY.

Agrarian Demand for Abolishing Grain Depots Is Turned Down.

Berlin, Feb. 7.—The tariff committee of the reichstag yesterday rejected by a vote of 16 to 12 the Agrarian demand for the abolition of the grain depots. This is a victory for the government and will probably have the result of impressing upon the Agrarians the importance of the recent official warnings against obstruction in the matter of a new tariff. It means that the depots will be retained in the large coast towns.

LIKE RATS IN A TRAP

ELEVEN PERSONS LOSE THEIR LIVES IN A LODGING HOUSE FIRE.

AWAKEN TO FACE DEATH

FIRE GAINS SO RAPIDLY AS TO MAKE ESCAPE IMPOSSIBLE.

MANY NARROWLY ESCAPE DEATH

EIGHT BADLY INJURED AND TEN OTHERS SEVERELY FROST BITTEN.

St. Louis, Feb. 11.—An early morning fire which destroyed the Empire hotel, a large three-story lodging house at 2700 and 2702 Olive street, occupied by men exclusively, caused the death of eleven persons, ten men and one woman, and dangerously injured eight others. Ten or more who had narrow escapes from death in the fire were more or less injured by being frost-bitten. It is estimated that there were between thirty-five and forty persons in the building, and it is believed all have been accounted for. The financial loss is nominal. It is thought that $30,000 will cover the damage to building and contents, which was totally destroyed. The fire started at about 3:30 a. m., when but few persons were abroad, and gained considerable headway before it was discovered and the alarm given. There was considerable delay in turning the alarm in, and when the engines finally reached the scene, the whole front of the building was in flames and the interior was

A Seething Furnace.

By that time all who escaped death had gotten out of the building by jumping from the windows or climbing down ropes made of bed clothes. A few escaped from the ground floor through the front door. Some of the escapes were very narrow. Almost everybody who got out suffered some injury or was frost-bitten. The guests barely had time to get out when aroused, the flames had spread so rapidly. Some saved their clothing, which they carried in their hands, but others were not so fortunate, losing everything. After some delay nearby houses were opened to the unfortunates and they were given shelter. It was one of the coldest nights of the winter, the ground being covered with ice and snow. After a short fight the firemen got the flames under control and, assisted by the police, immediately began the work of rescue. The bodies of most of the victims were found in their rooms, where they were suffocated or burned.

BIG PIER DESTROYED.

Fire Causes Damage Estimated at $250,000.

New York, Feb. 11.—Fire destroyed pier G of the Lehigh Valley Railroad company yesterday morning and the loss, including damage to shipping, is $250,000. The fire was discovered shortly after 6 o'clock by an employe who gave the alarm to the department in Jersey City. The heat started the automatic extinguishing apparatus and the force of twentyfive men at work on the pier did everything in their power to prevent a spread of the flames. A strong northwest wind made the work difficult and the fire rapidly gained headway. Fire tugs fought valiantly from the riverside, but the city fire department was obliged to drive over a mile of railroad tracks to reach the pier, which was doomed before the department reached it.

MAKE BEGGING A BUSINESS

WOMAN HOLDS SWAY OVER A STRANGE CREW OF MENDICANTS.

New York, Feb. 8.—Neighbors of Lucia Miskulin, the Austrian woman who yesterday was arrested in Hoboken on a charge of grand larceny, confirmed to-day the remarkable story she told in the recorder's court to the effect that the professional beggars with whom she boards deliberately maimed themselves for the purpose of arousing sympathy.

An investigation of the woman's story to-day revealed that for six years the two upper floors of the frame building at 528 Adams street, which she conducts as a 10-cent boarding house, has been the gathering place of a gang of professional beggars. In all there are about fourteen men, over whom the Miskulin woman has exercised a Sort of Authority.

The Miskulin woman declares that every injury the men have is self-inflicted. Assemblyman John J. Fallon of Hoboken, who is counsel for the woman in the action against her for larceny, says that he has personally investigated the matter and has found evidence that some of the woman's boarders have chopped their fingers off in her house with a cleaver.

No one knows where the Miskulin woman came from, but six years ago she rented the two upper floors of the building, in the heart of the Italian quarter of Hoboken. It was noticed in the neighborhood that almost every man who lived in her house was crippled. Some of the men would disappear for weeks at a time, but would sooner or later. Soon it began to be rumored that the men were professional beggars, and this suspicion was confirmed when one of the cripples while drunk told all about himself and his associates.

He said that they begged in Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia and other cities, some times going West, but always returning to the Hoboken house. Among the men the Miskulin woman was known as "Queen."

Cashier Gould Was Systematic in His Operations.

Gould, it is alleged, claims had it not been for the blowing up of the bank safe a short time ago, in which his private book, where he kept a record of all the forged notes, was destroyed, he would not have been detected and he would be still running the bank. The cashier and his brother are still in jail at David City. The day of their arraignment has not been set.

DEATH CLEARS IT

SECRET OF THE FAMOUS GAINSBOROUGH PAINTING NOW MADE PUBLIC.

"NAPOLEON OF CRIME" IS DEAD

PINKERTON TELLS HOW THE PICTURE WAS STOLEN FROM ITS FRAME.

CONCERN FOR HIS CHILDREN

GAVE UP THE PICTURE THAT HIS CHILDREN MIGHT ENJOY THE PROCEEDS.

Chicago, Feb. 8. — The Varsity flat Henry J. Raymond, and known as the "Napoleon of Crime," is dead in London, and with the announcement of his death yesterday all the details of the discovery of the famous Gainsborough painting were made public in Chicago.

When the famous picture was restored to its owner in Chicago last April there were many surmises as to the medium of return. William A. Pinkerton, who made the formal announcement of the recovery of the painting refused to confirm or deny the stories. Now that Worth is dead Mr. Pinkerton can speak, as Worth gave him written permission to reveal the Gainsborough secret after he had died.

Wrapped in oilcloth, the canvas was handed over to C. Moreland Agnew one morning last April in Chicago by Worth, who, twenty-five years before had from its frame in the Agnew galleries in London. The return of the painting took place in Mr. Pinkerton's private office. The owner of the picture hurried back to London for fear the United States authorities would demand a customs duty on the work which had been secreted in this country for fifteen years. It was while in London that Worth conceived the idea of carrying off the picture. His first plan was to rob the Royal Academy of its art treasures. Then he changed his mind and directed his attention to the Gainsborough painting. Assisted by his partner, he climbed into the Agnew galleries and one night cut the painting from its canvass and Carried It Away.

Worth owned a steam yacht and the canvass was taken aboard and concealed until he sold the vessel to Lord Lonsdale. Then he took the picture to Paris and finally brought it to America, where it was concealed for fifteen years. In the meantime Worth was arrested in Brussels and forced to serve seven years. Mr. Pinkerton had known Worth for thirty years. Two years ago Mr. Pinkerton received a telegram telling him that an important letter was at his home. The letter was from Worth, who asked an interview. This was granted, and Worth said he was going to die and wanted to "turn up" the Gainsborough picture in order that his two children who had been educated in a convent, might enjoy the proceeds. Through a hitch the picture was not recovered at that time. Worth returned to London and early last spring fulfilled his bargain.

Chicago, Feb. 8.—Adam Worth, alias building, situated at the southeast corner of Sixtieth street and Ellis avenue, was completely destroyed by fire last evening, entailing an aggregate loss upon the owners of the structure and the tenants of $160,000. The building was four stories high and contained forty-seven flats, all of which were occupied. All of the tenants had ample time to escape, however, and no lives were lost. The fire started in the basement in a pile of rubbish, and for a time it was impossible to locate the blaze. The building became so filled with smoke, however, that everybody was out before the flames were discovered. During the fire an explosion of gasoline in a grocery store located in the building hurled Fireman James Tillman from the fire escape on the second story to the ground, breaking his thigh and injuring him internally. Three Aged Men Found Dead in Kansas.

Kansas City, Feb. 8.—Upon the discovery yesterday of the dead body of George Zimmerman, a farmer sixty-three years old at his home near Morris Station, Kan., the Wyandotte county officials concluded that Zimmerman and two other aged men, all recluses, have been murdered in Wyandotte county since the first of the year by the same persons, and in each case it is believed the motive has been robbery. Wednesday of last week the dead body of Thomas Carroll, an aged hermit, was found in a well near his home near Argentine. He had been dead nearly a month and the coroner's jury decided that he had been murdered. Two men and a woman are in the Argentine jail pending an investigation of the mysterious disappearance last week of Noah Long, another aged recluse.

NORTH DAKOTA LAND CONTESTS.

Professional Troublemakers Are Responsible in Part.

Jamestown, N. D., Feb. 8.—There are many land contests in the Minot land district. Some of them undoubtedly will be successful, but the view taken by a traveling man who is familiar with the situation in Ward, McHenry and other counties in the district, is that a great many of the contests have been stirred up by sharks who are after all that can be squeezed out of the poor homesteaders.

ACCUSED OF COMMITTING A CRIMINAL ASSAULT ON A YOUNG LADY.

LADY'S BROTHER IS THE LEADER

FEMALE PORTION OF THE POPULACE IS PRESENT IN FORCE.

Nicholasville, Ky., Feb. 8. — Tom Brown, the negro accused of assaulting Miss Delia Powell Wednesday, was taken away from the sheriff and his deputies and lynched in the courthouse yard yesterday. The young lady's brother led the mob. Miss Powell is a student at the Jessamine institute in this city and living at her brother's house, about three miles north. Brown, who was nineteen years old, was arrested late Wednesday night. After he had been identified by his victim he was returned to town. As the carriage dashed up to the jail the mob dragged the negro from the authorities, who were helpless, though they made a strong resistance. Brown was hurried to the courthouse yard, two blocks away, where a rope was put around his neck and thrown over the limb of a tree. He strangled to death and made no confession or statement. The whole city, women as well as men, turned out, and all the ladies applauded at the end. There was no shooting.

Moville, Iowa, Feb. 8.—W. D. Hay's two-year-old son strangled to death in five minutes on a peanut, though a physician resorted to the most drastic measures to save the little fellow. The baby sat in his crib in the restaurant of his father playing with a large-sized peanut which the father had given him. The little chap put it in his mouth and in some manner got it started down his throat. It went into the windpipe instead of the gullet, and though an incision was made in the child's throat the obstruction could not be dislodged.

According to his own confession he has uttered $45,000 in worthless paper and until a few days ago escaped detection by a perfect chain of forgeries. In addition he admits having defaulted to the amount of $5,000 by failing to make any records of certificates of deposits. Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XV. (Continued.)

"That's rum," he said: "'Ow should a man get into that room?"

"There's only one man could be there—and a dead man at that," whispered Nugent. "I saw it once before—saw it come and go, just in the same fashion. Suppose—no, it's too mad altogether."

"What's too mad?" asked Cornelius.

"I was going to say—suppose this girl, who is always talking of this dead lover of hers—suppose in that mad state she's in she actually meets him; suppose, in some fiendish, ghostly fashion he's helping her?"

"I don't suppose anything about it," said Cornelius, giving himself a shake. "What's the use of supposin'? When once I get out of this blessed damp garden I'll suppose somethin' useful, somethin', maybe, valuable in finding the gel. Come inside and 'ave some brandy."

"I think you're right," said Nugent, trying to laugh. "In five minutes I'll be all right again, and ready to look at this matter squarely."

In less than that time, after drinking pretty freely of neat brandy, Nugent Leathwood began to see things from a different standpoint; to lose sight of any possible ghostly interference, and to see only some unknown human agency at work. With that thought, the courage of the man rose again, and his one idea was to find out, as rapidly as possible, what people he was fighting against, and to secure Olive once more. His first thought was in regard to Mr. Reeks; he felt that that man might, after all, have had the audacity to linger about near the house and to secure the girl, by a lucky chance, when she escaped from it. With that thought in mind, he directed Cornelius to get a cab and to hurry to Little Pond street.

"I can't go myself," he explained, "because I am already known there, and they might refuse me the information. But you can go, and you're sharp enough to find out whether the girl is there or where Reeks is. If he's not there, and they can't give any satisfactory account of him, I shall know that he is in the business again. Make haste; you can pretend you have come to see him on business, to pay him money—anything. If you see the woman you can easily discover from her manner if she knows anything."

"You seem to forget," said Cornelius, "that I've already seen the woman—at the gate here, when she came to inquire about her precious husband."

"To be sure. Then, that won't do. No; I must go myself; if there is a servant, I may get hold of her. I'll be back as quickly as possible."

He returned to Rickerby's Folly in something less than an hour. "I've seen the servant," he said, "and it is as I suspected. The girl is not there; but Reeks is away—no one knows where—and they don't know when he'll be back. Now, what are we to do?"

They stood in the room in which Nugent ordinarily sat, and Cornelius held in his hand a torn half-sheet of newspaper. The old man held it up, as the other asked the question, and pointed to a part of it, clumsily marked about with pencil.

"This is what we'll do," said Cornelius, with a grin: "we'll follow this 'ere advertisement. Since you've been out, I've been 'avin a look round. I've been 'untin' in that room where those play-actors were—and I've found this." He tapped the paper with his long forefinger as he spoke. "It's an advertisement; you'd better read it."

Nugent Leathwood caught at the paper impatiently and read the advertisement marked; it was as follows:

"Wanted—Heavy man and soubrette for Ghost Show. No beer kegs nor bar props need apply. Will Anthony Taggett and wife write in? Spencer Combination, Crown and Cushion, Barnet."

"Well, what does it mean?" asked Nugent, looking at it in perplexity. "It's all Greek to me. What has this got to do with the disappearance of the girl?"

"It's only a suspicion, of course," replied the other, "but I've got an idea that you'll find the girl somewhere near the Crown and Cushion, at Barnet."

"What makes you think that?" asked Leathwood, eagerly.

Cornelius scratched his chin thoughtfully, and looked up sideways at his master. "Well, in the first place, that woman, Taggett, 'as a good deal of friendly feeling for the gel; I caught 'er once 'er twice comin' out of the gel's room. Then, again, they went away yesterday, that's pretty evident, to take this engagement at Barnet. If the gel 'as bin got away at all, it's quite likely they've got a 'and in it. That chap, Reeks, may not be in the business at all. At any rate, I'm off to Barnet."

"I'm inclined to think that you're right, Cornelius," said Nugent. "You'd better start at once and spy out the land. As I can do nothing here, I'll follow you in an hour or two; I want to stop here at present, in case, by any chance, the girl has not gone there, and comes back."

"There's a better way than that," said Cornelius, after a moment or two of thought. I'll go down to-night and 'ave a look about me; if I find she's there I'll send you a telegram in the mornin'."

"Yes, that's better; that's much better," said Leathwood. "By Jove, Cornelius, you're a wise old bird; I'm glad I trusted you so completely. Between us, we ought to be able to get hold of this girl. And, look here: I'll have no more doubts about it this time; I'll take her away where's there no possibility of any of those sympathetic friends getting hold of her. We'll discuss that when we meet at Barnet—that is, if it is necessary for me to go down. I need not tell you to be diplomatic—there must be no violence, remember; we can't afford to have a single tongue wagging against us."

Mr. Veevers grunted a promise of obedience, made his few preparations, and set out on his journey. All the luggage he needed was contained in a small hand-bag, and he found that, with a smart hansom, he had just time to catch the last train for King's Cross. He felt considerably pleased with himself as he sat in a corner of a first-class carriage, and chuckled grimly to think how impossible it was for anyone to escape when his sharpness was brought to bear upon them.

"I'm a perfect bird-ketcher, I am," he muttered to himself. "They flutters away a bit, but not for long; I 'as my 'and on 'em before they can say a word. I wonder who's put the gel up to runnin' away this time? If I thought that Jemima—" He did not finish the sentence, but the action of his hands was sufficiently deadly to convey his meaning.

He got to dull little Barnet, looking duller than ever with everyone in bed, and set out to find the Crown and Cushion. He found it to be a modest little inn, with a comfortable, homely aspect, and with an unpretentious sign swinging over the door announcing the fact that there were "Beds for Travelers." He knocked at the door (for the house was closed for the night) and was informed that he could have a bed. As he was conducted through the bar by the man who had answered his summons, he dropped a gentle hint concerning possible refreshment; the man set down the light and began to bustle about to meet the wishes of his guest. Cornelius sat down and let his eyes roam over the walls.

There, on one wall, beside the bar itself, was a long, yellow placard, setting forth the fact that the Spencer Combination would give a grand performance on the next evening—the first of their tour through the principal towns of Great Britain; and that they would be assisted (this in very large letters indeed) by Mr. Anthony Taggett and Miss Medora Broom. Cornelius Veevers began to chuckle to himself again.

"Do you get many of these 'ere play-actin' folk in Barnt?" he asked, carelessly, addressing the landlord, who had set his drink before him.

"Not many," replied the man, "'cept at fair time—and they're a rough lot, I can tell yer. See that bill?" He jerked his head in the direction of the yellow placard.

Cornelius nodded. "I was jist a-castin' my eye over it," he replied.

"Stoppin' in this very 'ouse, they are," went on the man, with an air of pride. "None of your show-folk, there, not a bit of it. That's a gent for you!" he waved his hand toward Anthony Taggett's name—"a gent as is fairly all over Shakespeare—right up his back, in fact. "W'y, I do assure you, that gent uses words, w'en 'e's askin' for anythink ordinary, as you don't 'ear anywheres but on the stage. 'E's a credit to the 'ouse, that's what 'e is!"

Cornelius nodded, sympathetically. "Anybody with 'im?" he asked, sipping his liquor.

"Not till to-night. Then an old gent—a little man— come drivin' up with a young gel, an' asked for them. I think they said they'd drove straight from London."

"Ah!" Cornelius nodded again. "I think I'll go to bed, if you'll show me the way."

Cornelius Veevers was seized with such a violent fit of chuckling when he reached his room and was left alone there that it almost seemed for a few moments, as though he must inevitably lose his breath altogether—which might not have been a bad thing for some of those about whom he had been roused to so much unusual mirth. But he thumped and punched himself out of his fit; and finally got to bed and slept—crooked monster that he was—soundly enough, over the very room in which Olive Mallory lay.

He kept out of sight during the next day—only slipping out, by a back way, to the postoffice to send his telegram to his master. That telegram was brief and to the point:

"Found. Come down afternoon. Will be at station waiting."

That dispatched, he went back and informed the landlord that he should probably want his room again that night. Then he went back again and found his way to the station; and loitered about there, watching each train which came in from London.

Quite early in the afternoon Mr. Nugent Leathwood stepped out of a train and crossed the platform quickly and passed into a waiting room, merely giving a slight nod to Cornelius; that gentleman followed him at once.

"Well—so you've found her, have you? You're a clever old rascal—deuced clever, Cornelius." He laughed and clapped his hand on the old man's shoulder. "I don't really know how I should get on without you. Come, tell me all about it."

Stimulated by this praise, Cornelius gave a very full and minute account of all that had happened, of his talk with the landlord of the Crown and Cushion, and wound up by suggesting a possible plan of action.

"To-night these Taggett's will go to their play-actin; they're playing in a sort of barn at the other end of the town. They'll all go—sure to do; but they won't take the gel. Most likely they'll leave 'er be'ind. Well, I put it to you: there's two of us, and she's a mere slip of a gel. What do you think of that—eh?"

"I think very well of it, indeed, friend Cornelius," replied Nugent, with a grin. "But what about this fellow, Reeks? What are we going to do about him?"

"We'll hope for the best," said Cornelius. "For the present, we must'nt be seen about the place; make yourself scarce all day—come to the inn to-night—and hang about at the back until you see me."

Upon that understanding, they parted; Nugent to fume and rage about the town during the day, cursing the delay and torturing himself with fears and doubts; Cornelius to slink about until dark, and then to creep back to the inn. When he arrived there a surprise awaited him.

He met the landlord on the stairs and stopped to have a word with him. The mind of the worthy man was still occupied with those guests who had conferred so much honor on his establishment.

"Just started—they 'ave," he remarked. "And upon my word, w'en you look at that there Mr. Taggett, an' see as 'ow 'e looks just like you or me, in a manner of speaking, you'd never think 'e was goin' to do sich work as 'e is to-night—you wouldn't, indeed. But I suppose it comes nat'ral to 'im—same as drawin' beer comes to me."

"I suppose their friends—the young gel an the old chap—'aven't gone, 'ave they?" asked Cornelius.

"Yes, they 'ave," replied the landlord. "The little gent was most anxious to see this 'ere play, and he wouldn't leave the young gel; so they persuaded of 'er to go too. So they've all gone—play-actors an' all."

Cornelius passed on without another word. But he saw in this a complete upsetting of all his plans. It was evident that the girl was as strictly watched by those concerned for her welfare as it was possible for anyone to be. Then, too, his difficulties were increased by the fact that he could not communicate with Nugent Leathwood until night.

"Well, at any rate, I'll keep my eye on 'er; she shan't slip me easily," muttered the old man. "I ain't a man much given to play-actin'; an' I begrudge the tuppence for a back seat; but, if I don't look sharp, they may slip the gel away somew'ere else. Yes, I'll go to the play."

He found his way to the big barn in which the performance was to be held. At least, it had been a barn at one time; but it had been fitted up, when its original purpose had gone, with a narrow stage and benches. At the doors of this place he found a struggling crowd of people, elbowing and pushing their way in; and, old as he was, he immediately flung himself in among them, in the hope to get as good a seat for his tuppence as possible. Finally, after much struggling and the interchange between himself and others of some biting and sarcastic remarks, he found himself tightly wedged in on a narrow plank surveying the scene before him. Rising in his place, he looked in all directions for any sign of the girl and Mr. Reeks, and the next moment was jerked violently back into his seat by the coat-tails by an indignant man behind him, whose view he was obstructing.

But he had been rewarded. In a corner of one of the front benches he had caught a momentary glimpse of Mr. George Reeks, and, close beside him, Olive Mallory.

CHAPTER XVI.

A Drama of the Dead.

The play—as a play—did not prove to be interesting; or, at least, Cornelius Veevers was not stirred by it in any way. He had the satisfaction of seeing Mr. Taggett, as a remarkably loud-voiced and heavy villain, engaged in the unlawful pursuit of Mrs. Taggett, with her hair down her back; varied by mortal combats with the hero and the hero's comic friend; but as Mrs. Taggett, in her capacity of the heroine, appeared, quite artlessly, to wait for Mr. Taggett in the very places where she should not have been—to-wit, a wood, a ruined mill and a coiners' den—Cornelius lost any sympathy he might have felt for her, and regarded her, in his own mind, as a somewhat idiotic personage, whose sufferings were brought about by rank carelessness on her own part. He turned from the stage and regarded the people about him critically.

Suddenly, while doing this, he became aware—by that curious feeling which we have all experienced at some time or other—that someone immediately behind him was taking the deepest possible interest in him, craning a neck to get a glimpse of his face, and breathing hard in the vicinity of the nape of his neck. Cornelius twisted around sharply, and found himself within an inch or two of a face staring into his in the uncertain light of the naptha lamps. The face proved to be so startling that he twisted back again in a great hurry and pretended to be engrossed with the stage.

The face was that of Enoch Hubbard—the man who had shouted such strange things in the garden of Rickerby's Folly on the night of the burial, and who had originally got into the hous, under pretense of being the long-lost son of Cornelius; the man, moreover, who had got away in such an extraordinary fashion, leaving no trace behind him.

At the present moment every breath of that young man seemed to send a cold thrill of terror down the spine of Cornelius. For this was the man who had babbled strange things about dead bodies hidden away; the man who, in some mysterious fashion, had fathomed something of that gruesome business concerning Gilbert Rickerby. That he should be in this out-of-the-way place at such a time, and when all the people who had been even remotely connected with the matter were there also, was disconcerting. Cornelius, with the full intention of giving him the slip, began to reach for his hat and to cast his gaze towards the door. Mr. Hubbard must have divined that intention, for he thrust his face over the shoulder of the old man and whispered in his ear:

"It ain't no good your tryin' to give me the slip, 'cause you can't do it. I saw your pal—the dark chap—in the street to-day; I wasn't quite sure of 'im, but now I am sure. There's that chap, Taggett, on the stage—with 'is wife. All the lot o' you is in it, some-'ow, an' you'll find I'm in it, too."

Cornelius twisted his face around and looked at the speaker with an ugly grin. "You're a bright spark, you are!" He had, incautiously raised his voice, and immediately there sounded all about him indignant cries of "Order, order!" "Turn him out!" Cornelius resumed his contemplation of the stage, and began to cast about in his mind for a plan by which to escape.

Then came an interval, and Cornelius arose, with many others in the audience, and proceeded outside in search of refreshment. In the bustle and confusion, Mr. Hubbard was separated from him—got into an argument of a personal nature with a man he was endeavoring to elbow out of the way—and lost sight of his quarry altogether. Cornelius, taking advantage of this opportunity, hurried through the people and darted up a side street. Thence, after many twistings and turnings, he got back to the inn, and found his way to his room, where he sat in the dark pondering matters.

He had thought himself so safe—had felt the game to be absolutely in his own hands; and here, in a moment, he had been obliged to give up watching the girl and her protector, and to take flight on his own account. If, as was more than probable, the youth, Hubbard, knew anything about the murder, he might denounce Nugent Leathwood and Cornelius to the police at any moment; knowing that the Taggetts had been in the same house, he would only have to follow them, in order to run the other two to earth. Cornelius began to hope that Nugent might put in an appearance at an early moment, in order that they might lay their heads together and decide what was best to be done; and yet, on the other hand, he dreaded to see his master, because he knew that added danger would come with his appearance.

However, Cornelius Veevers was, after all, of a philosophic turn of mind, and was certainly the last man on earth to worry about anything before it happened. Knowing, therefore, that the Taggetts could not possibly arrive at the inn for some time, and feeling comparatively safe, and, moreover, being very tired of sitting in the dark and very thirsty, he made an excursion down to the bar in search of the landlord.

The bar was empty when he entered it; he gave a curt nod to the landlord, who was seated behind the wooden counter, and ordered a glass of brandy and water. The place being very quiet, and Cornelius being very comfortably established in a corner, a drowsy feeling presently stole over him, and he dropped into a sort of uneasy doze—one of those half-slumbers in which one is conscious of sounds and movements around him, without being able to distinguish accurately what concerning what is going on.

How long he remained in that condition it is quite impossible to say; but he was roused by the sound of voices. The caution of the man prompted him to remain perfectly quiet, while he opened his eyes a very little way and watched. It happened that he had sat down in his usual grudging, surly fashion, with his hat drawn well down over his eyes and his arms folded on his chest; it was quite unlikely that he would be recognized.

The people whose voices had disturbed him were Mr. Anthony Taggett and Mr. George Reeks. The former lounged against the little bar with the air of a man to whom fortune had suddenly grown kind, and who can, therefore, afford to listen with tolerance to the woes of his fellow man; and his fellow man on this occasion was evidently giving a somewhat lengthy recital of the particular woes which were his portion. Cornelius listened intently and heard every word; and he also noticed, through his half-closed lids, that Mr. Reeks held a telegram in his hand.

"My poor friend," said Mr. Taggett, soothingly, "I assure you that I feel for you very keenly in the trouble which has fallen upon you. Man, as you are doubtless aware, is born to trouble; and, among the fiends in human form who prey upon him are, first and foremost, brokers. Believe me, my friend, I have suffered in the same way; indeed, I remember, on one occasion, being reduced to a pair of green worsted tights as my sole nether garments, on account of the depredations made by brokers."

"Yes, I know, I know," moaned Mr. Reeks; "but that doesn't help me at the present moment. Mrs. Reeks is alone and unprotected; and, moreover, Mrs. Reeks, sir, is a figure which naturally attracts the attention of our sex. See her telegram!" He held out the document, as he spoke, under the nose of Mr. Reeks.

"Yes, my friend, I observe it. It is a species of despairing signal, fluttering from the hand of Mrs. Reeks—a signal of despair. What does it say? 'Brokers in. Chief broker very attentive.' That looks bad, extremely bad. A broker is a beast of prey; but he is formed in the likeness of man, and he has feelings; I suppose even a broker has an eye for a fine woman."

"Don't, don't, Mr. Taggett; you'll drive me mad!" cried Mr. Reeks, twining his hands in his scanty hair. "I know I can trust Mrs. Reeks, who loves me with a love not often given to man; but it maddens me to think of a mere broker casting his eyes upon her. I must go back; I must return at once. If I could only get the money to pay off these men, to make a fresh start in life!"

"Ah, in that I fear I cannot assist you," said Mr. Taggett. "As a matter of fact, writs are out against my person; and, but for the vanity (excusable enough in a woman) of Mrs. Taggett, I should not dare at the present moment to appear in such large type before the public eye. But Mrs. Taggett loves me, and honors the name I have conferred upon her; hence this display!" He waved his hand toward the yellow placard on the wall.

"Mr. Taggett," said Reeks, after a pause, "I am about to do a disgraceful thing. I can't help it—it is forced upon me; but my home and the sacred person of Mrs. Reeks are more to me than anything else. I have certain papers in my hands which are worth £500; I shall take these papers to the man who offered me that sum, directly I reach London. The papers belong to Mr. Gilbert Rickerby, of whom we both know. Do not try to stop me; it would be useless. At the present moment I have but one watchword, and for that watchword I desert my trust, and sell what does not belong to me. That watchword is: 'Home and Mrs. Reeks!'"

Without even stopping to say good-bye or to explain his meaning further, Mr. George Reeks rushed out of the bar and went at top speed up the street towards the station.

Mr. Anthony Taggett sighed a little over the weakness of mankind, and looked about for someone to whom to talk. He noticed the old man, apparently asleep in the corner, and, as a gentle hint to him that it would be better manners to wake up, overset a chair. The wily Cornelius, feeling that he could not much longer remain undiscovered, pretended to start suddenly, yawned profusely, thrust his hat back from his eyes, and sat up and stared at Taggett.

To say that Mr. Anthony Taggett was taken by surprise would be to state the thing mildly. When first Mr. Reeks had appeared at Barnet with his charge, Anthony Taggett and his good-natured wife had been only too ready to undertake the care of the girl. Now, in a moment, Mr. Taggett recognized the fact that Reeks was gone, and there sat, within a yard of him, a man from the enemy's camp. Anthony Taggett's first impulse was to become truculent on the instant, and to demand what Cornelius wanted; but he remembered, in time, that this might be purely an accidental visit, and that the man might not even be aware that Olive Mallory was in the house. Mr. Taggett prided himself upon his power of assuming any manner at a moment's notice; he determined, upon the instant, to become genial. Accordingly, he started back, in well-feigned astonishment and delight, and then advanced, with outstretched hands, to meet the old man.

"My dear Mr. Veevers!" he exclaimed, "this is, indeed, a most joyful meeting. had not hoped to meet you again so soon."

"No—I suppose not," growled Cornelius, writhing under the grasp of Anthony Taggett's hands. "I 'appen to be down 'ere on business—collectin' rents"—he added, at an inspiration. "Funny to meet like this—ain't it?"

"It's positively delightful!" exclaimed Mr. Taggett. His one desire was to get Cornelius away from so public a place, where a chance remark might be made at any moment, which would show the old man that the girl was there. There was still a possibility that his statement was true, and that he had not come in search of her. Therefore, he added, in a tone of cheery welcome: "But come, we cannot talk in comfort here; come up to my room—the apartment I have engaged, in order to secure privacy for myself and for Mrs. Taggett, while we are at this hostelry. By the way, did I mention that Mrs. Taggett was with me?"

"No, I don't think you did," said Cornelius, with much gravity.

"Oh, yes—she's here; we are performing in a sort of worthless drama for a little time together; the patrons of that kind of work clamor for me, and I can practically secure my own terms. They clamor, also, in a minor degree, for Mrs. Taggett, whose charms appeal to them strongly. But come up stairs; Mrs. Taggett has, I think, retired, and we shall be alone."

CLEVER BOY'S POINT OF VIEW.

Anent the Work of Some Women in Decorating the School Rooms for the Pupils.

Mrs. Thomas M. Patterson, wife of the new senator from Colorado, is best known at home for her work in the promotion of educational and philanthropic enterprises. She has been especially interested in the art decoration of the schools of Denver, and was the leading spirit in the movement which raised and expended many thousands of dollars in this work. The pictures were Braun photographs, Copley prints, and other high-class reproductions of the world's great paintings. The latter, as everybody knows, run largely to Biblical and mythological figures. Under her management an entertainment was given to raise funds to decorate a certain building, and the pupils were requested to sell tickets. One boy took a ticket to his father, explained the object and solicited patronage.

"Pictures?" said the father. "what kind of pictures do they put up?"

"Oh, Jesuses and Venuses," said the boy.—New York Times.

Quits.

A wealthy foreigner, intent upon a day's outing, wanted to hire a dealer's best horse and trap; but, not knowing his man, the dealer demurred at trusting them in his hands. Determined to have his drive, the gentleman proposed paying for the horse and vehicle, promising to sell them back at the same price when he returned. To that the other saw no objection, so the customer's wants were supplied, and off he went. He was back in time at the stables, his money reimbursed, according to contract, and he turned to go.

"Hold on!" exclaimed the dealer, "you have forgotten to pay for the hire!"

"My dear sir," was the cool reply, "there was no hiring in the case. I have been driving my own horse and trap all day."

And he left the dealer to his sorrowful reflections.—Tid-Bits.

Original of Shakespeare's Portia.

Shakespeare's Portia is a pen-portrait of Lucretia Cornaro, the first woman lawyer in the world, the Myra Bradwell of the fifteenth century, who received a degree of doctor of laws from the University of Padua, where she was educate dand afterwards lectured on law. Her biography has been published. She was a native of Venice.

Lucretia Cornaro was one of the most learned of women, and her biography gives remarkable accounts of her eloquence, erudition and influence. She was so much admired and respected that the doges and the council of ten used to consult her upon legal questions, and her fellow citizens submitted their differences to her for decision instead of going to court. It was natural, therefore, that she should be mixed up in the Shylock case.—Chicago Record Herald.

Safe.

At a recent sale of autographs in Paris, an old man and a young one were bidding against each other very energetically for the possession of a letter signed by a name but little known.

"Twenty francs!" "Twenty-five!" "Thirty!"

Finally the figure reached 300 francs, and the letter was knocked down to the young man.

You have a longer purse than I," said the other. The letter you have in your hand is very compromising to the man who wrote it. I regret to see it fall into the possession of a stranger. I was his friend."

"I am his son," was the rejoinder.—Cassell's Journal.

BEFORE HE TOOK VOGELER'S

He Could Not Touch His Wife's Dinners, and They Were "Fit for a King."

So writes our esteemed friend Mr. Frank Chambers of 9 Bennett street, Chiswick: "For over two years I suffered agonies from indigestion and became reduced to a mere shadow of my stalwart self. I would return home from my business feeling so faint that I could hardly drag one leg after the other. My dear wife did all she possibly could to tempt me with dainty dishes, and as I entered the house I sniffed and thought: 'Oh, how good; I know I can eat that!' But alas! no sooner had I eaten a few mouthfuls, when I felt sick; severe pains shot through my chest and shoulder blades, my eyes swam and everything seemed black, I became alternately hot and cold, and got up from such a dainty dinner heartily sick of living, and feeling I was a sore trial to everybody. I may mention that I was also very much troubled with scaly skin, and often boils. But one evening I noticed my wife seemed more cheerful than usual. I questioned her and found she had been reading a pamphlet she had received of men afflicted just as I was, and who had been cured by Vogeler's Compound. Said she, 'What gives me more faith in it is that it is made from the formula of an eminent physician now in active practice in the West End of London, so I am sure it is no quack thing.' 'All right, dear, let's have a bottle,' said I. After taking the contents of the first bottle, I felt very much better, and determined to give this remedy a fair trial, and I can positively assure you that a few bottles made a new man of me. I can sleep well, eat anything, and thoroughly enjoy life. I have told several of my friends whom I knew were suffering the same as myself, and they all wish me to say that they are like new men. I sincerely bless the great physician who gave you the formula of Vogeler's Curative Compound, and also yourselves for making its virtues known to a suffering public."

"Sunday Opening" Up to Date.

It was the young daughter of an East Side saloonkeeper, innocent of any theories about "Sunday opening," but perfectly familiar with the practice. She was in her class in the mission Sunday school, and in course of the catechism "quiz," the question came to her:

"Who made the world?"

"God did," was the prompt answer. "He made the world in six days, and was arrested on the seventh."—New

No Judge of Art.

The seller of pot-boilers came into the office of the shrewd broker with the air of one who is about to sacrifice a priceless treasure. It was a seascape; a troubled sea beat upon purple rocks, and wind-driven gulls wheeled in wild circles above the familiar pot-boiler ship. The seller of pot-boilers looked upon the treasure long and yearningly. It could be seen that a grievous struggle between art and appetite was raging within him.

"How much do you want for it?" demanded the shrewd broker.

"One hundred dollars," said the pot-boiler man. "It's giving it away."

"Give you three for it," said the broker

"It's yours," said the pot-boiler man. "That fellow across the way only offered me 5 cents; but he ain't no judge of art."—New York Evening Post.

A Strong Statement.

Star, Wis., Feb. 10th.—Mr. Samuel S. Hook, one of the most highly respected residents of this neighborhood, has given a very hearty recommendation to Dodd's Kidney Pills, a remedy recently introduced here. He says:

"I have been a sufferer from Kidney Disease for some time, and found nothing to help me until I began to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. They gave me almost immediate relief, and I am now well. I have recommended them to many friends, and in every case with splendid results.

"They are the very best pills for all kinds of ailments, but especially for Kidney Complaints."

This is a very strong statement, and, coming from a gentleman of Mr. Hook's standing and reputation, it has had a tremendous influence in Vernon county.

Mrs. L. A. Harris, a Prominent Member of a Chicago Woman's Political Club, tells how Ovarian Troubles may be Cured without a Surgical Operation. She says:

"Doctors have a perfect craze for operations. The minute there is any trouble, nothing but an operation will do them; one hundred dollars and costs, and included in the costs are pain, and agony, and often death.

"I suffered for eight years with ovarian troubles; spent hundreds of dollars for relief, until two doctors agreed that an operation was my only chance of life. My sister had been using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for her troubles, and been cured, and she strongly urged me to let the doctors go and try the Compound. I did so as a last resort; used it faithfully with the Sanative Wash for five months, and was rejoiced to find that my troubles were over and my health restored. If women would only try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound first, fewer surgical operations would occur."—Mrs. L. A. Harris, 278 East 31st St., Chicago, Ill.

THE KANSAS PEOPLE ARE IN LOVE WITH WESTERN CANADA.

They Say the Land There Is the Finest on Earth.

A great number of delegates have been influenced through the agency of Mr. J. S. Crawford, the Canadian government representative at Kansas City, to visit western Canada, and whether from Missouri or Kansas the story is always the same—they are pleased with the new country being opened up. Isaac H. Lovegood writes from Didsbury, Alberta, as follows:

"I met three delegates from Kansas yesterday at Didsbury, and took them home with me and took them out in the afternoon and showed them some of the finest land that lays on top of God's green earth. They are more than pleased with this country. They stayed with me last night; this morning I took them to Didsbury, and they went on north. When they come back they are coming to my place and I am going to help them to run some lines and they are going to locate in sight of my house. There have been over 1,200 acres of land changed hands here in our neighborhood this spring. When I located here last fall I was the furthest back of any of the settlers; to-day I am in the center of the settlement. We have thirty-six children that are of school age in our district, and we will have our school district organized next month, when we will proceed to build our schoolhouse. The longer we stay here the better we like the country; that is the way with everybody here, they all seem to be satisfied and doing well. I have talked with a great many men here and they told me that they had less than $50 when they got here, and today they have got 160 acres of good land and five or six hundred dollars worth of stock. Crops are looking fine here. I think this will be a good winter wheat country. One of my neighbors has a small piece and it looks fine."

FEES OF SURGEONS.

ENORMOUS SUMS HAVE BEEN PAID BY GRATEFUL PATIENTS.

European Royalties Invariably Recompense Their Medical Attendants Highly—Quarter of a Million Dollars Is the Record for One Single Fee.

In the medical world some enormous fees have been paid from time to time. In 1762 the famous Hertfordshire physician, Thomas Dimsdale, was summoned to St. Petersburg to vaccinate the Empress Catherine II. He was in the city less than a week, but so successfully did he accomplish his task that he was paid a consideration of £12,000 in addition to a life pension of £500 a year. Another costly vaccinating operation was that performed a few years ago by Dr. Butler upon six Indian rajahs, and from each of his patients he received £10,000 for less than a day's work.

When King Edward, or the Prince of Wales, as he was then, lay at death's door with typhoid fever, the famous William Jenner was called in for a period of four weeks, and in return he was paid at the rate of £2,500 a week and given a baronetcy into the bargain. Nor was it by any means unusual for him to receive a fee of £500 for an hour's consultation with less celebrated patients.

But royalty invariably pay their medical attendants highly. The late Sir Morell Mackenzie journeyed to Berlin to relieve the sufferings of the Emperor Frederick during his last illness and secured a fee of £20,000, while Professor Zacherine of Moscow, who was called to Livadia, when the Czar Alexander III. lay dying, was presented with a check for £15,000, in addition to all expenses, for a two days' attendance upon his illustrious patient.

Dr. Yowski, the famous oculist, pocketed a fee of £7,000 for attending the shah's son at Teheran some years ago, a figure completely put into the shade by that captured by an English army surgeon, who paid occasional visits to the Rajah of Rampur, India, when that potentate was suffering from an acute attack of rheumatism. The patient did not wait for him to send in his bill, for, finding his treatment beneficial, he rewarded him with £10,000.

The highest medical fee ever paid, however, became the property of a blind physician, Dr. Gale of Bristol, who cured a wealthy patient of a diseased knee by electric treatment, and in return found his banking account richer by £50,000.—Pearson's Weekly.

Spying on Clerks.

The professional shopper is employed in London in a different capacity than her American sister, her work in connection with one large firm savoring of dectective service with the clerks as the individuals to be watched and reported. The firm in question owns over thirty large shops, and employs nearly 1,000 clerks. It is the business of the professional shopper to find out whether every customer is politely served by visiting the different shops, putting the clerks to every inconvenience and frequently leaving without making a purchase after looking at nearly everything in the shop. If the clerk's temper does not prove equal to the strain and she answers in the fashion of the American shop girl under similar circumstances she is reported to headquarters and dismissal is apt to be the result.

Description of Lord Kitchener.

An English writer lately returned from South Africa has published the following description of Lord Kitchener: "Tall and well-proportioned above, he falls away from his waist downward. It is this lower weediness which evidently troubles the man who fashions his clothes. A round, red and somewhat puffy face. Square head, with staff cap set carelessly upon it. Heavy mustaches covering a somewhat mobile mouth, at the moment inclined to smile. Eyes just anyhow; heavy but not overpowering eyebrows. In fact, a very ordinary face of a man just past his prime. Hardly a figure that you would have remarked, if it had not been for the gilt upon his hat—in fact, it was all a disappointing discovery."

Manager Knew His Business.

The story of how Harry Coates, the singing navvy who has been delighting London audiences at the music halls, came to leave his pick for the stage, gives an interesting illustration of the keen eye managers have for something new. Coates was singing gaily at his work one day when the manager of the Brighton Empire passed by, and so sweet was the man's voice that he offered him an engagement. "Here," he said, "do you want to earn £5 a week?" The navvy promptly closed, and although this happened only six months ago, his weekly salary has already been increased to a much higher figure.

Football in Japan.

As early as the seventh century Japan borrowed football from China. The Emperor Toba II. was an expert player and formed a club in the palace, says Cassell's Little Folks. Considering how adverse most orientals are to hard work and rigorous exercise, it may be supposed that the game was very different from either "rugger" or "socker." Nevertheless, the Japanese form seems to have been popular, and we may trace the beginnings of professionalism to an emperor and his court, of whom it is told that in a time of poverty they earned a little extra money by teaching the art of football

No Excuse This Time.

"It was a new gun, your honor," protested the prisoner, "and I did not know it was loaded."

"But," argued the judge, "the dealer has just told us that you did not pay for the weapon."

"What has that to do with it?"

"Well, if you didn't pay for it, the dealer must have charged it for you."

And the judge tried to look as much like the pictures of Solomon as he could.—Baltimore American.

Compressed Air for Street Cars.

Experts claim that compressed air will eventually be the power of the future, supplanting both the cable and the trolley systems. In all lines of industry we see constant improvements, but in medicine there is one remedy that cannot be improved on, and that is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It is founded on true merit, and will cure indigestion, dyspepsia, flatulency, constipation and nervousness, also prevent malaria, fever and ague. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

New Light on an Old Subject.

The man who had been kicked by a mule, and was quoted as saying he "considered the source," was speaking of it afterward to some of the other fellows.

"I wouldn't care," he said, "if there hadn't been so much fuss made over it, as if it was a bright thing for anybody to say; but the honest truth is that I never said anything of the kind. When you're kicked by a mule you're not in a frame of mind for considering things. What I really said was 'You derned old beast, if I had a gun, and you were somebody else's mule, and it wasn't against the law to shoot inside the corporation, I'd blow your derned old head off, dern you!'"—Chicago Tribune.

What Is the Shape of the Earth?

The exact shape of the earth is a question which cannot be settled without fresh evidence from the Antarctic. For this purpose, two, at least, of the expeditions have been provided with pendulum outfits; by noting the exact length of time occupied by the swing of a pendulum the distance from the place of observation to the earth's center can be determined. It is held that the polar regions of the South project further from the plane of the equator than does the North polar region; according to one estimate, the South pole is slightly more than one-hundredth further from the earth's center than the North pole.—Popular Science Monthly.

Her Weight in Silver Crowns.

A singular freak of parental liberality in the matter of dowry is reported at a wedding during the present week. The marriage took place at Koniggratz. On the betrothal of his daughter, Herr Duchatschek had announced that he would give her, as a marriage portion, her weight in silver currency. Accordingly, on the wedding day, the bride was formally weighed in the drawing room, in the presence of assembled guests, before proceeding to church. The lady turned the scales at sixty-two kilogrammes, a sack was at once filled with silver crowns of the same weight, with a half-kilogramme over—for the weight of the bag, as Herr Duchatschek playfully explained. The exact number of crowns was 12,500.—Frankfurter Zeitung.

TORTURING SKIN DISEASE.

R. L. Johnson, Cadberry, Ky., says: "I am glad to say that Cole's Carbolisalve has cured me of a terrible itching, torturing skin disease known as psoriasis, and now I am able and willing to recommend it to all who are troubled with skin diseases."

Sheer Nonsense.

"He never washes his hands."

"Nonsense!"

"No; it's a fact."

"Then he's a crank, eh?"

"Not at all. He says it would take too long. He employs 200 in his mill."—Philadelphia Press.

SISTERS OF CHARITY

Use Pe-ru-na for Coughs, Colds, Grip and Catarrh—A Congressman's Letter.

Dr. Hartman receives many letters from Catholic Sisters all over the United States. A recommend recently received from a Catholic institution in Detroit, Mich., reads as follows:

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 8, 1901.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio:

Dear Sir—"The young girl who used the Peruna was suffering from laryngitis, and loss of voice. The result of the treatment was most satisfactory. She found great relief, and after farther use of the medicine we hope to be able to say she is entirely cured." SISTERS OF CHARITY.

This young girl was under the care of the Sisters of Charity and used Peruna for catarrh of the throat with good results as the above letter testifies.

SISTERS OF CHARITY

All Over United States Use Pe-ru-na for Catarrh.

From a Catholic Institution in Ohio comes the following recommend from the Sister Superior:

"Some years ago a friend of our institution recommended to us Dr. Hartman's Peruna as an excellent remedy for the influenza of which we then had several cases which threatened to be of a serious character.

"We began to use it and experienced such wonderful results that since then Peruna has become our favorite medicine for influenza, catarrh, cold, cough and bronchitis." SISTER SUPERIOR.

Dr. Hartman, one of the best known physicians and surgeons in the United States, was the first to formulate Peruna. It was through his genius and perseverance that it was introduced to the medical profession of this country.

The following letter is from Congressman Meekison, of Napoleon, Ohio:

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

Gentlemen:—"I have used several bottles of Peruna and feel greatly benefited thereby from my catarrh of the head, and feel encouraged to believe that its continued use will fully eradicate a disease of thirty years' standing." DAVID MEEKISON.

He is the only avowed candidate and the only one who has any desire for the nomination from that party. Nat is a big man in Crookston, but he will find out next fall that the people living in other portions of the district do not hold him in such high esteem.

It is stated in railway circles that the further extention of the Minnesota and International railroad towards the Canadian boundry will not be taken up for a couple of years. THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS.

VOL. XIX. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1902. NUMBER 7

LATEST NEWS

From Washington About the Reservation.

A telegram to C. L. Dobner from Mayor Kratka stated that he and McLaughlin left Washington Tuesday. If they come direct without stopping they will arrive here tomorrow.

C. L. Dobner last Saturday received a letter from F. H. Kratka dated at Washington, Feb. 12, in which Mr. Kratka stated that he was waiting for the secretary of the interior to send Maj. McLaughlin back to Minnesota with him. He finds that matters go very slow in Washington, there being a great deal of red tape connected with all transactions, but has hopes that he will be able to leave Washington on the 16th or 17th of February, which indicates that he will be in Thief River Falls this week.

Mr. Kratka states that the senators and representatives in congress from this state have given him a great deal of assistance and is loud in his praise of them. He advises that our citizens make suitable preparations for the entertainment of the inspector and to assist him in getting the Indians together for the purpose of making the treaty. He is confident that the lands can be opened by this session of congress, providing the matter is pushed. The people of this city will be well pleased if it is opened up by the next congress.

A telegram to the Minneapolis Journal from Washington states that Inspector McLaughlin will leave Washington this week for the Red Lake reservation, and that he anticipates that it will will take about a month to make a treaty. He hopes to have it made in time to have it ratified by this session of congress.

Mr. Kratka has written a letter to Mayor Campbell, of Crookston, asking if it would be possible to secure a stenographer and typewriter in Crookston to accompany Maj. MaLaughlin to the Red Lake Agency where the treaty with the Indians will be made. Mr. Campbell has replied stating that a competent person can be secured there.

Want a Creamery.

Postmaster Warring, of Excel, was in the city the first of the week and informed the News that the farmers of his section were going to build a creamery this summer. A meeting will be held Saturday afternoon, March 1st, at which time the matter will be discussed and a location selected. There are about 500 cows within a short distance of where the creamery is to be built and it will undoubtedly be successful.

Indian Liquor Cases.

Senator Clapp has introduced a bill which provides that Indian liquor cases may be determined and settled by United States commissioners on or near the reservation, says the Fergus Falls Journal. This will do away with the liquor cases that have occupied so much of the time of the United states court.

BIGEST EVER

The Creamery to Be Built Here Next Summer.

It has been fully decided that the creamery, mention of which was made in the last issue of the News, will be built in Thief River Falls next spring. It will manufacture all the way from 3,000 to 5,000 pounds of butter a day, and will be the largest institution of its kind in the state. From six to ten seperator stations will be located at various points in the country around here, one being as far north as Ringbo, and one as far south as Lambert. These seperator stations cost about one-half as much as an ordinary creamery, and are practically the same thing as a creamery to the farmer. The cream will be hauled from these stations to Thief River Falls and here manufactured into butter.

The central station here will be under the personal supervision of W. H. Blunt, one of the best buttermakers in the state of Iowa, who will own one-third of the stock of the new company to be formed. The Prichard-Stone company, of this city, will own a large share of the stock and other local business men will also be interested.

HOHENZOLLERN ARRIVES.

Imperial German Yacht Is Welcomed to New York.

New York, Feb. 14.—The imperial German yacht Hohenzollern, sent here for the use of Prince Henry of Prussia during his forthcoming visit, arrived yesterday from Kiel. She was not expected, for she came by the Southern circle, and it was calculated that the run would take at least one day more than 1; did. It had also been thought that she would touch at Bermuda and that place had reported her two days overdue. The weather encountered was unfavorable for a call at Bermuda, and at sea Admiral Count von Baudissin abandoned the partly formed plan and shaped his course for New York. The yacht had some heavy weather in Southern waters, but for the most part it was fair, and when it was at its best she logged sixteen knots an hour. She hove in sight off Sandy Hook a few minutes before noon, and an hour later was in quarantine. She got the courtesy of the port from federal officials and came on through the Narrows and up into North river without delay. Passing craft gave her a noisy welcome with their whistles, and the men at her jack-staff were kept busy dipping her big naval flag with its field of white, black Prussian eagle and black cross. Admiral von Baudissin was formally welcomed to New York by a civic committee, a representative of Mayor Low and an official of the United States navy.

MURDER OF KING HUMBERT.

Evidence That the Deed Was Planned in New York.

New York, Feb. 14.—In a report by the police of this city to the Italian ambassador in Washington and the Italian consul in New York the direct assertion is made, the Herald says, that the killing of King Humbert was planned here. The police have named the men who conspired with Gaetano Bresci. Many of them are still at liberty. The report, which, it is asserted, was sent to Baron Fava and which reached Consul Branchi soon after Bresci's crime, contains a resume of the growth of the Italian anarchist societies in this country. Names and dates are freely given. Just four months to a day before the assassination of King Humbert, according to this report, the crime was planned in this city. It was at a meeting of anarchists held at a hotel owned by an Italian who has since died. That meeting was called by Malatesta, who presided. Among others present were Gaetano Bresci, Guido Canovo, the Grazzini brothers and the Biatto brothers, who are now fugitives, believed to be in Colorado. Incendiary speeches were made and the assertion was shouted that King Humbert must die.

CONFIDENT OF VICTORY.

A Letter From One of the Insurgent Leaders in Venezuela.

New York, Feb. 14.—Senor Monagas, ex-secretary of the Venezuelan legation at Washington, has received a letter from Gen. Domingo Monagas, one of the leaders of the Matos insurrection. It was smuggled from the interior of the State of Bermudez to the coast and then taken by a fisherman to Trinidad. "I feel satisfied, that by March," the letter states, "we will be victorious and be able to substitute the corrupt and despotic government with one of honest men and conducted on honest business principles. All this portion of the country is opposed to Castro, and there has been no trouble in finding men to join our army. I also learn that several of Castro's best generals have deserted him and joined the rebellion. It is no exaggeration to say that the Libertador could easily engage the entire government fleet and defeat it."

IMPURITIES GALORE.

Illinois Official Talks of Dead Horses and Deceased Fish.

Aurora, Ill., Feb. 14.—Old and diseased horses and mules are slaughtered and sold under the name of beef by four large packing houses of Chicago. Fish that have died a natural death are a regular article of merchandise in some sections of that city. And in no part of Illinois is there any protection to the consumer against flour that is adulterated with the mineral barytes and against the deleterious, impure vinegar which St. Louis sends into the state in large quantities. These disclosures were made by Assistant State Food Commissioner R. M. Paterson in an address yesterday before the Retail Merchants' Association of Illinois.

ROOSEVELT, JR., DOING NICELY.

Vitality Probably Sufficient to Carry Him Through Approaching Crisis.

Groton, Mass., Feb. 14.—If Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., continues for the next twenty-four hours in his present condition his physicians have given the president and Mrs. Roosevelt to believe that their son's vitality will be sufficient for him to meet and pass successfully the crisis in his disease which is looked for some time to-day, and on to-morrow morning he will be practically out of danger. Last night he was considered to be better than the night before, and the same can be said of his two schoolmates, Howard F. Potter of New York and William Gammel, Jr., of Providence.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Agreement to Keep It Down to About Sixty Million Dollars.

Washington, Feb. 13.—Definite understanding has been reached by the river and harbor committee that the river and harbor bill, now approaching completion, shall be kept down to about $60,000,000, the amount carried by the measure framed and defeated last year. The committee is working daily but the decisions on specific items are all tentative and open to revision.

HEIRESS WANTED

POLICE OF HALF A DOZEN CITIES LOOKING FOR THE YOUNG LADY.

BIG FORTUNE WAITING FOR HER

WAS KIDNAPPED BY HER FATHER ABOUT EIGHTEEN YEARS AGO.

TWO CLAIMANTS HAVE BEEN FOUND

EACH ANSWERS THE DESCRIPTION OF THE MISSING HEIRESS.

St. Louis, Feb. 15.—The police of half a dozen cities, including Chicago, St. Louis, Quincy and St. Joseph, are interested in finding Miss Harriet Tracy, heiress to a fortune left her by Mrs. William E. Sage of this city, to whom the care of the child was intrusted on the death of her mother. Two claimants have been found, but the brothers of the missing girl are mystified as to which one is their sister, as they have not seen her or heard from her in eighteen years.

One of these claimants is Etta Hivon, the adopted daughter of Ferdinand Hivon of Chicago; the other is in Quincy and is known as Harriet Rivers.

Each Claims to Be the Heiress.

The brothers of the missing girl have been carrying on the search for years. Recently they enlisted the aid of the police of Western cities in the search, with the result that two girls have been found, each of whom answers the description of the missing heiress and has her claims backed up by persons supposed to be familiar with the facts of her disappearance from her home and her subsequent life.

The girl Harriet Tracy was kidnapped from Mrs. Sage, then Miss Mary Cull, by the child's father, who wished to put her in the care of a Catholic family. Frank Rivers, a shoemaker, secured the child and moved away from St. Joseph. Chicago police recently found Dennis Rivers, a brother of Frank Rivers, and he produced Ferdinand Hivon, who, he said, was his brother Frank. Hivon claims that the girl known as Etta Hivon, his daughter, is in reality the missing Harriet Tracy.

William Liebig and wife of St. Joseph, who tried to secure the girl for adoption at the time Rivers secured her, claim that she is now living at Quincy with Mrs. Frank Rivers, who left her husband shortly after the girl came into their home. The brothers of the heiress will go to Quincy and Chicago to investigate.

RATHER TARDY CONFESSION.

Conscience Pricks a Man Who Committed Murder Eighteen Years Ago.

Austin, Tex., Feb. 14.—Eighteen years ago James Leonard, who for many years has been a prominent and honored business man of Hondo, Tex., attempted to hold up and rob a saloon at Princeton, Colusa county, Cal. In the hold up he shot and killed the proprietor, Charles Homstreck.

Leonard fled and located at Hondo, this state, where he has led an honest and upright life. During all these years he has been conscience-stricken over the crime committed in California and this weighed so heavily upon his mind that several days ago he made a full confession of his crime to the district attorney of Uvalde county.

Acting upon this confession the officers of Colusa county, California, were communicated with and an investigation was instituted, which resulted in Leonard's story of the hold-up and murder being verified in every particular. Gov. Sayers has honored a requisition by the governor of California for the return of Leonard to the scene of the murder, where he will stand trial for the crime.

KILLED HIS SISTER.

Accidental Shooting While a Boy Was Playing With a Revolver.

Joliet, Ill., Feb. 14.—John Linns Vincent, the eleven-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Vincent, Lockport, accidentally shot and killed his sister, Anna Adelina, nine years old, while playing with a revolver. She died almost instantly, shot through the heart. The baby, which she held in her arms, fell to the floor. The bullet grazed the little one's head, just over the ear.

POINTS FOR SOLDIERS.

An Entire Regiment, Soon to Leave for the Philippines, Is Vaccinated.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—Vaccinating a regiment has been the strenuous occupation of physicians at Fort Sheridan for some time. Preparatory to the departure of the Twenty-ninth United States infantry from the fort for the Philippines, Feb. 20, surgeons of the different regiments at that fort have vaccinated nearly 800 men, and have prepared them in various other ways against the dread diseases which have proved deadly enemies to the boy in blue.

CONGRESS.

House Passes Resolution for the Election of Senators by Popular Vote.

Washington, Feb. 14.—The house yesterday unanimously adopted a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for the election of senators by direct popular vote. There was no demand for time to debate the resolution. This is the fourth time the house has adopted a similar resolution. Two bills of general importance were passed by the house, the remainder of the time being devoted to minor business. One was a senate bill to provide for the payment of the claims of Confederate officers and soldiers, whose horses, side arms and baggage were taken from them by Union soldiers contrary to the terms of the surrender of Lee and Johnson's armies. The amount to be paid under the bill was limited to $50,000. The other bill was to confer on the Spanish claims commission authority to send for persons and papers and to punish for contempt.

In the Senate.

While no definite agreement has been reached, a vote on the Philippine tariff bill in the senate seems to be in sight. It appears likely, judging from a discussion late in the day's session that the vote may be had next week, although the matter yet is involved in some uncertainty. Mr. Teller of Colorado concluded his speech yesterday. He urged strongly that the Philippines be given the fullest possible measure of self-government, the United States simply maintaining a protectorate over the islands. He said he would prefer that this government should withdraw absolutely and without condition from the archipelago than that the present war should be continued.

WRECKED BY ICE FIELDS.

Schooner Is Abandoned by Crew in a Sinking Condition.

Cape May, N. J., Feb. 15. — The schooner Frank Herbert, with a cargo of pine lumber from Opecoke, N. C., for New York, was abandoned in a sinking condition off here yesterday, it being the second vessel to fall a victim this week off this coast to the great ice fields floating out of Delaware bay. The distress of the schooner was first discovered on shore by the Gold Spring lifesavers, who immediately launched their yawl and made an attempt to reach the vessel. The Herbert was about five miles off shore, and, owing to the heavy ice fields the life-savers were unable to reach the distressed schooner. Fortunately the tug Harold, with a tow of barges, hove in sight and after signalling the barges to anchor the tug went to the rescue. It was found that the schooner had been caught in the ice and that she had been pierced in several places by the heavy mass. She was full of water and sinking, and the captain of the Herbert declined to abandon her. Before he and the crew were taken off by the Harold the sinking vessel was set on fire and was soon a mass of flames. The fire burned for several hours after darkness fell.

OFFICER'S MAD DEED.

Causes His Wife's Death and Fatally Wounds Himself and Daughter.

New York, Feb. 15.—Philemon Crelin, a special officer at Milburn, near Orange, N. J., at his home last night, shot his daughter and himself and caused the death of his wife. Father and daughter are expected to die. The daughter's name is Mrs. Mary Ferguson. She and her three children made their home with the Crelins. Tuesday night Crelin had a quarrel with his wife and tried to stab her with a carving knife. The daughter interfered and quieted her mother's ire. Crelin then threatened to kill Mrs. Ferguson. Last night when he went off duty he brought his revolver home with him. While all the facts are not known at present, it seems likely that he first shot the daughter. She was struck by two bullets, one of which entered her abdomen and the other her left breast. It is thought he then attempted to shoot his wife, but she was suddenly seized with a hemorrhage of the lung and fell to the floor dead. The officer then shot himself, the bullet striking in the region of the heart.

BIG BANK MERGER.

Over One Hundred Banks Will Go Into a Combine.

New York, Feb. 15.—A story was circulated yesterday that a securities-holding company is to be organized under the laws of New Jersey with a capital of between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000, which would "practically unite under one management and in a community of interest some of the principal smaller banks of the country."

According to the story, at least one hundred banks would be embraced in the plan, which if carried into effect, would "mean that the branch bank system that is so successfully operated in Canada and Great Britain will, in effect, be in operation in this country, only in another way —that is, through the medium of the securities company plan."

In some quarters it was supposed that the story grew out of a scheme suggested some time ago for a combination of certain banks. The National Park bank of this city, two banks in St. Paul and a bank in Chicago were mentioned in connection with it, and a St. Paul man, it was said, is to be president.

Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 15.—The house yesterday passed a bill aimed at Christian Scientists. SMALLPOX RAGES

ILLINOIS TOWN IN THE THROES OF THE TERRIBLE DISEASE.

IT HAS THREE HUNDRED CASES

YOUNG LADY CATCHES IT FROM HER STEADY AND PASSES IT ALONG.

MINGLES IN THE GIDDY WALTZ

WORST EPIDEMIC OF THE DISEASE IN THE HISTORY OF THE STATE.

Mattoon, Ill., Feb. 15.—Teutopolis, a thriving city of 1,500 inhabitants on the Vandalia system in Effingham county, is in the throes of the worst epidemic of smallpox that has been reported in the state.

Yesterday reports reached this city stating that 300 persons are down with the disease, which is spreading with remarkable rapidity, as nearly every one in the place and many country people have been exposed.

Several weeks ago a young man from St. Louis infected with the disease visited Teutopolis and communicated it to a young woman to whom he paid attentions. Shortly after, while broken out and in ignorance of the character of the disease, the young woman attended a public dance, at which probably fifty people of the village were present.

She Mingled Freely

with the dancers and all were exposed to infection. Two weeks ago several persons who attended the ball were taken down and the character of the complaint was learned. The local board of health quarantined the patients, but the disease assumed such an alarming state that the state board of health was appealed to. A rigid quarantine has been established. Trains are not allowed to stop in the corporate limits. No one is allowed to enter or leave the place, nor is any mail taken away. Mail and supplies are thrown from moving trains. A theatrical company is detained by the scourge.

Editor Charles Worman of the Press was stricken with the disease while in his office. A bed was improvised and he is confined in the office. Some of the most prominent residents of both sexes are infected and business is at a standstill.

HE STOLE THE BAGGAGE.

Employe of the Road Confesses His Guilt.

Sparta, Wis., Feb. 15.—George Kiefer, baggage agent at the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul depot in this city, was arrested yesterday by General Baggage Agent Carrick of Milwaukee on the charge of stealing baggage. Articles have been disappearing for some time past and a detective was sent here to investigate. The thefts were traced to Keiffer. When confronted with his crime he broke down and acknowledged all. He was taken before a justice and given a sentence in the county jail.

DES MOINES CLOSES SCHOOLS.

Common Council Prohibits Public Gatherings in City.

Des Moines, Iowa, Feb. 15.—The city council of Des Moines, sitting as a board of health yesterday, passed a resolution providing for vaccination in the public schools and prohibiting all public gatherings until the smallpox epidemic had been checked. The action of the council was partly on account of the visit to the city of Mr. Rupert Blue of the United States marine hospital to investigate conditions and determine whether or not the mail should be quarantined.

BORN WITH SMALLPOX.

Remarkable Case of an Infant Victim of Disease.

Sioux City, Iowa, Feb. 15. — The youngest person ever known to be affected with the smallpox in this city is the seven-days-old child of J. C. Gibble of Center street. The case was reported to the board of health. The child probably contracted the disease at birth, and the doctor says it will probably recover.

Matilda's Mutiny

By Sara Lindsay Coleman

COPYRIGHT, 1902, BY DAILY STORY PUBLISHING COMPANY

Polly Fox, who six months before had gladly left the village's ever increasing sisterhood of spinsters to become the wife of the Reverend Mr. Fox and mother to the little and big Foxes, said to her husband, as Matilda, tall and trim, swung down the village street at a pace that comes from strength:

"It's plum scan'lous—she's got on a short skirt an' her hair down her back. It's her birthday an' she ain't done a lick o' work to-day. Jes' left it all for her mar an' Mary. Sed she'd been slavin' ten year, sence she come home from college, an' she intended havin' a day off. They done a bad thing for her when they sent her to college. She got quare notions an' has flouted every man in the village. I don't reckon she'll flout any more."

Matilda left the village behind her and plunged into a near wood. She flung herself full length on the ground and lay there motionless. Life had brought her nothing of what she had dreamed.

There was a flash of moving color and a burst of song in the silent wood; below, the river roared and tumbled in its eager seaward rush. June lay on the wide, wonderful mountains—June, with its glory of color, its abundant young life; and the June time which lives in the souls of unwed women was in Matilda. The June time! It revolted at life and death in a country village; it scorned the spinsters with their sharp tongues, their sagging shoulders and sagging hips, their dull-hued lives of toil.

Suddenly Matilda got to her feet and began heaping up the earth into a mound; she worked industriously and when she tossed back the heavy braid of hair that had slipped over her shoulder she laughed—a reckless laugh.

"It's almost amusing," she said.

"If I were in the secret I am sure I would agree with you." The voice was not far off that had spoken the words.

Matilda turned with the air of an insulted princess. The short skirt, the braided hair accentuated the youthful look.

"This," she said, haughtily, "is a private wood."

"And I am on a fence," was the calm reply, "and beyond is the king's highway."

Matilda gave the stranger a grave looking over but he stood unflinchingly.

"The ceremony was about completed," she spoke more graciously, "the song comes next." She threw back her head and sang in a clear, fresh voice, "How tedious and tasteless the hours." At the end of the first line she stopped and laughed.

"You are putting away the dolls and playthings of life?" the man asked.

"I found that the dolls were sawdust and put them away twenty-five years ago." This in a disdainful tone.

"What an ancient you are," said the man.

"Yes," humbly.

The man got down from the fence and came over to Matilda.

"What did you bury there?" he asked, indicating the mound.

"My youth," she spoke defiantly.

"Ye gods!" the man burst into laughter.

Matilda came a little nearer.

"You are a southerner and a gentleman," she said. "I know from your voice and your eyes. I'm celebrating. It's my birthday. At first I wept. You should have seen the glances that followed me down the street. I know how their tongues wagged when they saw my hair down my back; they all know that I am thirty."

"Well," said the man, "what if you are! I've known women of thirty who were much nicer than white-muslined, blue-ribboned, giggling girls."

"What did you bury there?"

"Out there," with a comprehensive sweep of her hand that took in the world beyond the blue circle of mountains; "here," she pointed to the village church spire that cut the blue reach of sky, "a woman's life ends at thirty, if she's unwed. She is a personal grievance to every man and woman in the village, and as long as there's breath in her body they feel responsible for her and try to marry her off. It's bad enough when a new man comes into the community; it's shivery when a man's left a widower—oh, how I hate widowers!" She made a gesture of despair.

"You might try suicide," the man suggested.

"I've thought of it," said Matilda, darkly.

They looked at each other. The sun filtering through the trees flung coins of gold at their feet.

"It's my birthday," the man spoke slowly. "We might celebrate together; we might have one last day of youth."

A sudden wistfulness shone in Matilda's eyes, but she shook her head.

"It would be the one delicious, isolated impropriety of your life."

She looked at him doubtfully.

"You've let the band go down the other street all your days?"

"Yes," pensively.

"You have done the things you hate and left undone the things you'd love to do."

"How did you know?" she asked.

He trampled the grave she had made

"We have had to-day."

—the grave that held her youth and pointed to the water below, where a boat rocked softly.

"Come," he said.

Matilda moved slowly from him in the direction of the church spire.

"The music," murmured the man impressively, "is going down the other street."

"Where are we going?" asked Matilda. She had stepped into the boat.

"To a land of mutual discovery," he said gayly. "It leads through winding paths; perhaps it returns to the level; perhaps it goes to the heights——"

Matilda's heart had leaped to her throat at the look he gave her. It was a strange proceeding for so aged a heart that had put aside all youthful follies.

The boat moved slowly; the river swept away into the forest's depths. Their laughter was the spontaneous laughter of two who find content in each other's presence; their silence held no estrangement.

A purple mist settled on the blue mountains that belted the distance; from some near hill, a milkmaid's call floated. The knowls above them were massed in bloom. A deep sweet happiness filled the woman's soul. It was but just that life out of its fullness should have given her this one last day of youth.

The boat turned homeward. The sun, a ball of fire, was dropping behind a far mountain peak. It was dragging her off to a dream country from which she would wake in a shiver. Alas, that from dreams the dreamers awake. But the boat crept on—in the perfumed gloom the laurel crowned hills were white. It was still a dream. A school girl dream come true. A castle built on lonely evenings when the wind had shivered and the thoughts were long, long thoughts—a castle turned to gleaming marble.

The boat touched the landing. For an instant the man felt the pressure of her light weight; then she stood beside him on the river bank.

"Good-by," said Matilda. She held out her hand; her eyes had a strange sweetness—the sweetness of a joy relinquished at birth, laid reverently away with her one day of youth.

"Good-by," she faltered, "it grows late."

"Good-by?" the man said, puzzled. Then he laughed down into her eyes, "Good-by until tomorrow."

"We have had to-day," said Matilda.

"And will have to-morrow." The man's boat shot out into the stream.

Matilda climbed the hill that led to the village—the dreary village. And in the west where the day was fast dying the star that comes first to the waiting sky glowed.

The Indian and the Spectacles.

The Holton Recorder tells an amusing story of an Indian from the Pottawatomie Reservation who visited an oculist in Holton to get a pair of glasses. The oculist seated him, and went through the usual tests with printed cards, eliciting from his customer but little comment as he tried on the different lenses. At last, when the oculist was almost in despair, the Indian pulled a couple of dice from his pocket, threw them on the floor, snapped his fingers as he grunted, "Come seven!" and then smiled all over his fat face when he found he could distinguish the spots readily. And the lesson seems to be that even the unphilosophic red man has grasped the immortal truth that the price of success is painstaking attention to matter of equipment.

Adversity may prepare a man for the life beyond, but it curtails his credit while here on earth.—Chicago News.

A TOWN'S RAPID GROWTH.

Effect of President Hayes' Visit to a Kansas Village.

Mr. George Clements of Kansas City, a well-known knight of the sample case, is responsible for the following story:

"Talk about the rapid growth of cities, why, Neosho Falls, Kan., holds the record. I think the town is still on the map, but I won't be sure. At any rate, I remember when the population jumped in one day from 600 to 40,000, and the next day jumped back again. This was merely occasioned by a fair, and not a county fair at that, but simply a little crossroads celebration. It was just after President Hays had been elected. He was touring the West at the time, and the citizens of Neosho Falls secured a promise from him to attend their fair. The town was fortunately on the line of a railroad, with a service of two trains a day, but when the company learned of the President's proposed visit a gang of workmen at once started to lay sidings. At least a dozen were constructed around the little frame station, together with a Y, for the convenience of the engines. When the great day arrived the President was at hand, with several members of his cabinet and a military escort from Fort Riley. The railroad company estimated that 40,000 people visited Neosho Falls that day, and I dare say some of them are talking about it yet. The next day the visitors were all gone, for there were no hotel accommodations, and nothing to feed them with. The gang of workmen came back and tore up the sidings and the Y, and the town again resumed its normal placidity, just as though nothing had happened."

SOME AGED ANIMALS.

Those Who Have an Easy Life Live for Quite Lengthy Periods.

In the vicinity of Paris a home for old domestic animals was established some time ago, and among the present inmates are a mule 72 years old, a cow 36, and a pig 25 years old.

It is claimed that domestic animals which lead an easy life are likely to live far beyond the average age, if properly cared for. Many birds certainly attain an extraordinary age. Eagles, ravens and parrots frequently live a hundred years and pelicans probably live as long, for it is recorded that one of these birds was placed in the Amsterdam zoological garden some time before 1792, and was still there in 1870. This pelican, too, was at least four or five years old when it was placed in the garden.

Eels are also long lived. Professor Buchner tells of one, which was kept for twenty-six years in a pond at Thiengen, in which it was placed at the age of eight years. It attained a length of nearly five feet, and its favorite haunt was in the current that flowed into the pond. All authorities agree that domestic animals which are obliged to do a good deal of work do not live so long as those which lead a placid life.

Queer Advertisements.

A general servant advertised in a Bristol paper for a place the other day, but required "no inquiries; no caps or aprons; every evening out; good wages," and a journalist advertised himself as of "no particular ability" as a recommendation. A clerk recently sought a place "where great strength, personal appearance, or ability are not required." "Good butter, 0d a lb. Nobody can touch it," was ambiguous and may have been wrongly interpreted by the public; and a Gloucestershire paper which inserted the advertisement, "Our one-and-ninepenny dinner at 6:30 p. m. Funerals promptly attended to," apologized next day for mixing up two separate and distinct announcements. But it is a fact that a church paper appealed lately for "Old man, lame, deaf, epileptic. Will any Christian take him for a gardener?" and that in a leading Scotch journal an advertiser asked for "£65 to pay debts incurred through losses at betting."

Turquoises in Asia.

Turquoises are the favorite stones of all the Mongol races, and are generally worn in their original state, except by the Chinese women, who have them roughly cut, and wear them mixed with pearls and coral. Both the Tibetan men and women ornament themselves with lump turquoises, the men wearing them attached to their single gold earrings, which are worn in the right ear only. The women of Ladakh carry their fortunes on their hands, in the shape of a broad strip of red cloth studded with huge turquoises, which, starting from the forehead, is carried over the head, and hands nearly to the waist. These peraks, as they are called, sometimes cost as much as £20. By the Ladakhis those turquoises are preferred that have little black specks on them.

Age of the Eggs.

The Backer und Konditorzeitung gives the following method of determining the age of eggs as practiced in the markets of Paris: "About six ounces of common cooking salt is put into a large glass, which is then filled with water. When the salt is in solution an egg is dropped into the glass. If the egg is only one day old it immediately sinks to the bottom; if any older it does not reach the bottom of the glass. If three days old it sinks only just below the surface. From five days upward, it floats; the older it is, the more it protrudes out of the water."

He is no wise man that will quit a certainty for an uncertainty.

THE DUST OF WASHINGTON

The tombs of England's honored dead
Are, like her annals, grand;
Leaning o'er Chatham's buried head,
Drooping by Nelson's trophied bed,
As if their hearts of marble bled,
Art's silent mourners stand.

But how, my country, hast thou shrined
Thy patriot-heroes' dust?
Hath he, in whose majestic mind
All human virtues were combined—
Hath he—the champion of mankind—
Carved urn or laurel bust?

No—from his tomb th' unsculptured stones,
Mildewed and broken, fall;
No marble warders guard his bones,
His grave nor state nor nation owns,
And he who startled Europe's thrones
Neglected lies of all.

The monuments that Nature gave
Are melting fast away;
The branches that were wont to wave
Like banners, o'er the good and brave,
Torn rudely from his hallowed grave,
Are speculation's prey.

Conquered Cornwallis rests in state,
So Howe and Clinton lie;
For Britain bars not glory's gate
Against e'en her defeated great,
While we to him, whose sword was fate,
A fitting tomb deny.

Sons of the soil—heirs of the fame
Earth's purest patriot won,
Let not his memory be your shame,
The sordid ransom give, and claim
The dust of Washington!

Early Selected for High Honors

Although Col. Washington retired to a private station at Mount Vernon at the close of the frontier warfare, he did not neglect his duties to the public. Still holding the office of adjutant-general of the militia, he circulated orders for them to assemble at certain times and places to be exercised and reviewed. So much were the inhabitants alarmed at the recent successes of the enemy, that their martial spirit received a new impulse, and volunteer companies began to be organized. Their ardor was stimulated from the pulpit and it was in a sermon to one of these companies that the accomplished and eloquent Samuel Davies pronounced the celebrated encomium in a single sentence, which has often been quoted as prophetic. After praising the zeal and courage which has been shown by the Virginia troops, the preacher added: "As a remarkable instance of this, I may point out to the public that heroic youth, Col. Washington, whom I cannot but hope Providence has hitherto preserved in so signal a manner for some important service to his country." This was but the echo of the general voice, and it is a proof of the high estimation in which the character of Washington was at that time held by his countrymen, and of the hopes it had raised.

Patrick Henry's Worthy Tribute

Mr. Wirt relates an anecdote of Washington which shows in what estimation he was held by the members of the first Congress. Soon after Patrick Henry returned home, being asked "whom he thought the greatest man in Congress," he replied, "If you speak of eloquence, Mr. Rutledge of South Carolina is by far the greatest orator; but, if you speak of solid information and sound judgment, Colonel Washington is unquestionably the greatest man on that floor." This opinion was verified by every act of his life. His knowledge, on the subjects to which he gave his attention, was most thorough and exact; and all the world has agreed that no other man has given such proofs of the soundness of his judgment.

Absolute Stranger to Physical Fear

An anecdote is related by an historian illustrative of Washington's resolution and courage. A person of lawless habits and reckless character had frequently entered upon the grounds near Mount Vernon, and shot ducks and other game. More than once he had been warned to desist, and not to return. It was his custom to cross the Potomac in a canoe, and ascend the creeks to some obscure place, where he could be concealed from observation. One day, hearing the discharge of a musket, Washington mounted his horse, and rode in the direction of the sound. The intruder discovered his approach, and had just time to gain the canoe and push it from the shore, when Washington emerged from the bushes at the distance of a few yards. The man raised his gun, cocked it, pointed it at him, and took deliberate aim; but, without a moment's hesitation, Washington rode into the water, seized the prow of the canoe, drew it to land, disarmed his antagonist, and inflicted on him a chastisement, which he never again chose to run the hazard of encountering.

Mrs. Washington's Noble Character

In the course of the year following the French and Indian war, Col. Washington had paid his addresses successfully to Mrs. Martha Custis, to whom he was married on the 6th of January, 1759. This lady was three months younger than himself, widow of John Parke Custis, and distinguished alike for her beauty, accomplishments and wealth. She was the daughter of John Dandridge. At the time of her second marriage she had two children, a son and a daughter, the former six years old, the latter four. Mr. Custis had left large landed estates in New Kent County, and forty-five thousands pounds sterling in money. One-third part of this property she held in her own right, the other two-thirds being equally divided between her children.

By this marriage an accession of more than one hundred thousand dollars was made to Col. Washington's fortune, which was already considerable in the estate at Mount Vernon, and other lands which he had selected during his surveying expeditions and obtained at different times. To the management of his extensive private affairs his thoughts now turned. He also took upon himself the guardianship of Mrs. Washington's two children, and the care of their property, which trust he discharged with all the faithfulness and assiduity of a father, till the son became of age, and till the daughter died in her nineteenth year. This union was in every respect felicitous. It continued forty years. To her intimate acquaintances and to the nation, the character of Mrs. Washington was ever a theme of praise. Affable and courteous, exemplary in her deportment, remarkable for her deeds of charity and piety, unostentatious and without vanity, she adorned by her domestic virtues the sphere of private life, and filled with dignity every station in which she was placed.

The Best Army in the World.

The American army is the most effective organization in the world. The men are well fed and well paid, but these alone will not make a good soldier. He must have steady nerves and a strong constitution. To fight disease it is also necessary to have the same requirements. If you are weak and nervous you need Hostetter's Stomach Bitters at once. It will steady your nerves and cure indigestion, heartburn, dizziness and constipation. Try it.

Generous.

Mr. Newlywed (solicitously)—And how did you get along with the butcher, love?

Mrs. Newlywed—Oh, splendidly. He is such a generous man, Mortimer. When I order a four-pound roast he always sends me one weighing six or seven.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Moral Didn't Work.

Papa—See that spider, my boy, spinning his web? Is it not wonderful? Do you reflect that, try as we may, no man could spin that web?

Johnny—What of it? See me spin this top! Do you reflect that, try as he may, no spider could spin this top?—Tit-Bits.

The Side De Morny Cared For.

The Duc De Morny, half-brother to Louis Napoleon, was ambassador extraordinary to the emperor of Russia during the coronation festivities, and wrote home that the French might learn something from the Russians, if it were only how to light 10,000 candles in five minutes. De Morny was in Paris the night before the coup d'etat, and spent the evening at the opera. Between the acts he went into one of the boxes to speak to a lady of his acquaintance.

"What shall you do, M. de Morny," asked the lady, "if the national assembly is swept out of doors, as threatened?"

"Madame," he replied, "I shall try to be on the side of the broom handle."—Gentleman's Magazine.

He Clinched It.

Erie, Kans., Feb. 17th.—In July of 1900, W. H. Ketchum of this place was suddenly seized with a violent pain in the back. He says he supposed it was a "stitch," and would soon pass away, but it lasted five months and caused him great soreness, so that he was barely able to get out of bed. He became alarmed and consulted a doctor, which only increased his anxiety and did him no good.

A friend who had some experience advised him to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. Mr. Ketchum began with six pills a day, and in a week was well and the soreness all gone. However, this did not satisfy him, for he says,

"I thought I would clinch the cure with another box, and I did. I have had no recurrence of the trouble since, and as this is over a year ago, I am thoroughly convinced that Dodd's Kidney Pills have completely cured me."

His Complaint.

Judge—Your only complaint against this woman is that she threw a brick at her husband?

Complainant—Well, yes.

Judge—Then, what business is that of yours? She didn't throw it at you.

Complainant—I know; but if she had she might have hit her husband, and I wouldn't have this black eye.—Philadelphia Press.

LOVELORN BILKED

MATRIMONIAL AGENT ARRESTED BY THE POSTAL AUTHORITIES.

GAVE NOTHING FOR MONEY TAKEN

PERSONS CRAVING WEDDED BLISS ARE SEPARATED FROM THEIR MONEY.

TRUSTING ONES ARE DECEIVED

DEPOSIT REQUIRED FROM EACH CLIENT AS A GUARANTEE OF GOOD FAITH.

Chicago, Feb. 18.—On the charge of defrauding lovelorn men and women in many parts of the country, N. C. Clark, proprietor of the Erie Advertising agency and Introduction bureau, was arrested yesterday by the postal authorities and bound over to the federal grand jury. It is said that the man demanded $5 from each prospective client as a "guarantee of good faith," and that the correspondent got nothing in return.

The complaints in the hands of Inspector Ketcham indicate that scores of trusting men and women were deceived by the promises of the defendant and readily gave up $5 each in the hope of securing life partners. The story of one of these is said to be a sample of the rest.

D. H. Britt of Raynhm, N. C., was attracted by the advertisement of Clark's agency and immediately sent a letter in which he expressed a desire to enter the state of matrimony. He inclosed the required deposit of $5.

By return mail he received the photograph of a maiden whose beauty could not be disputed. The accompanying letter informed Mr. Britt that the woman was Mrs. Ella McCastney of Asheville, N. C. "a young widow without children, worth in cash and city property at least $75,000.

"Her reason for marrying," he was told, "is that she wants a husband that will be good and kind to her, to take charge of her affairs and relieve her of the many worries incident to business cares."

The young woman was surprised on receiving a letter from a stranger who showed that he was contemplating marriage with her, and in reply to his questions she wrote that she knew nothing about the matrimonial bureau and that when she was ready to marry she would seek for a husband in her own way. She also is said to have informed the astonished Mr. Britt that she had none of the wealth which her correspondent had suggested she owned.

BRITISH CAUGHT IN TRAP.

Boers Open Fire on Them From Three Sides and Overpower Them.

Pretoria, Feb. 18.—One hundred and fifty mounted infantrymen, while patrolling the Klip river south of Johannesburg Feb. 12, surrounded a farmhouse where they suspected Boers were in hiding. A single Boer broke away from the house and the British started to pursue him. The Boer climbed a kopje, the British following. Immediately a heavy fire was opened up on them from three sides. The British found themselves in a trap and in a position where they were unable to make any defense. Eight of the British officers made a gallant effort to defend the ridge with carbines and revolvers until they were overpowered. The British had two officers and ten men killed, and several officers and forty men wounded before the force was able to fall back, under cover of a blockhouse.

BELL MAKES CLEAN SWEEP.

Insurrection in Batangas Practically Cleared Up.

Manila, Feb. 18. — Gen. J. Franklin Bell has practically cleaned up the insurrection in Batangas province, the troops under his command having made a clean sweep of the district. It is not believed that all the insurgent arms have been captured or surrendered, but that a number of them have been taken by the insurgents to other provinces or safely hidden. The increase of robber bands in the provinces of Tayabas and Cavite show the effects of the drastic measures adopted in Batangas and Laguna provinces. Gen. Bell says the people of these latter provinces never realized the terrors of war until they personally experienced its hardships, owing to the closing of the ports and the concentration of the natives in the towns. He believes that the insurgent leader Malvar is becoming exceedingly unpopular with the Filipinos, and that when the natives cease to fear his vengeance many will be found willing to betray him. What has been said of Batangas province applies almost equally to Laguna.

DEATH IN A COLLISION.

Freight Train Collides With Rear End of a Fast Passenger Train.

Litchfield, Ill., Feb. 18.—Two persons met death and five were injured yesterday in a rear-end collision between the "Diamond Special" of the Illinois Central and a freight train at a point five miles north of Litchfield. The collision was remarkable in that the fast passenger was ahead of the freight and both trains were moving. The "Diamond Special" was moving at a rate of twelve miles an hour when the freight crashed into the rear sleeper. It is said the passenger would have been traveling faster had there not been some trouble with the locomotive mechanism. The engineer of the freight engine declared that the fog was so thick he could not see one hundred feet ahead. Two Pullman coaches were badly wrecked and the freight engine is almost a total loss, while several freight cars loaded with baled hay were ditched.

OUTLAWS ESCAPE

MAKE SAVAGE ATTACK UPON AND SERIOUSLY WOUND THE SHERIFF.

WOMAN MAKES BRAVE STAND

NEGROES TEAR WEAPON FROM HER AND OPEN FIRE ON THE CROWD.

ARMED CITIZENS TO THE SCENE

ONE MAN KILLED AND IN EXCITEMENT THE DESPERADOES ESCAPE.

Sumterville, Fla., Feb. 18. — Henry Wilson and Julius Goodwin, notorious negro outlaws, made a savage attack on Deputy Sheriff Lane yesterday as he was leading them into their cells from the corridor. The officer was knocked to the floor and seriously wounded. The men then ran through the jailer's residence and were attacked by Mrs. Lane, who was rushing to the assistance of the officer with a Winchester rifle in her hands. The negroes attacked her and wrenched the weapon from her. The woman's screams attracted a great crowd and negroes barricaded themselves behind their victim and began using their weapons on all who entered the house. George Stafford, a young white man, was dangerously wounded in the head with a club, and William Porter, another white man, was badly wounded in a clinch fight. In a few minutes news of the battle at the sheriff's house spread through the town and places of business were closed and scores of people with all kinds of weapons ran to the scene. The negroes had rushed upstairs and barricaded themselves from the throng below. Lee Graham, one of the most prominent young men in the town, with gun in hand, attempted to reach the second floor, and was shot dead. In the excitement following the murder the men escaped through the back, and though several shots were fired at them in the pursuit, managed to get away. Both of them are believed to be seriously wounded.

At the mention of the names of Lee and Jackson they were cheered as loudly as were those of Grant and Barber, though a large number of those who applauded had lost limbs at Antietam.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

Bill for Relief of Bobleter Is Recalled by the Senate.

St. Paul, Feb. 17. — Senator H. J. Miller of Rock county Saturday demanded the reconsideration of the bill relieving Former State Treasurer Bobleter from liability for state deposits in banks that suspended while he was in office. Senator J. D. Jones of Todd presented a resolution for the recall of the bill, which had passed both houses.

Senator McGowan introduced a bill to abolish the present railroad and warehouse commission, and providing that the governor appoint a new commission of three members by the first Monday in March. The first appointments are to be for one, two and three years, and thereafter for three years each.

Senator McGowan introduced another important measure, which calls for a constitutional amendment, providing that all household furniture and personal clothing shall be exempt from taxation.

In the House.

The house Saturday, declined to tie the hands of the committee on taxes in the way of limiting the time for it to discuss the tax code.

The resolution of Mr. Haugland calling for a report Monday was sought to be amended by Mr. Anderson to permit a report Wednesday.

It was intimated that this would be satisfactory to the committee, but some of them did not see it that way, and when Mr. Dobbyn of Hennepin moved to lay all the resolutions on the table, the motion carried.

Representative Nyquist's bill repealing the dog tax law passed last winter was taken from the house calendar and placed on general orders after a good deal of discussion.

TRAGEDY AT HELENA.

Prominent Man Mortally Wounds His Wife and Commits Suicide.

Helena, Mont., Feb. 18. — Harold M. Cole, assistant superintendent at the East Helena smelter is dead in an undertaker's establishment, and Olive Mayne Cole, his wife, is at her home mortally wounded as the result of shots fired by the husband. The tragedy occurred last evening shortly after 8 o'clock at the residence of the couple. There were no witnesses to the tragedy and the wife is so seriously injured that she is not able to make any statement. One story of the affair is given by Mrs. Mayne, the mother of Mrs. Cole. Mr. Cole came in from East Helena about 7 o'clock. Shortly after his arrival Mrs. Mayne went out and returned in a little while. As she went up the steps she heard a shot, quickly followed by another. She was accompanied by her husband, and on entering the house saw Cole falling to the floor, while his wife was lying on the lounge with the blood streaming from two wounds, one in the head, back of the ear, and the other in the left breast. Lying at the foot of the woman were a number of letters. An examination showed that Cole was mortally wounded and he died before a physician could be summoned. He had shot himself through the head. Mrs. Cole is a young and handsome woman. The theory is that the husband found some correspondence belonging to his wife and that there was a quarrel and then the tragedy.

IS OUT OF DANGER

THE CRISIS IN THE DISEASE OF YOUNG THEODORE ROOSEVELT PASSED.

PRESIDENT GOES TO WASHINGTON

CHEERED UP BY THE KNOWLEDGE THAT HIS SON WILL RECOVER.

THE BOY MAKES GREAT STRIDES

WILL BE REMOVED TO THE WHITE HOUSE AS SOON AS PRACTICABLE.

Groton, Mass., Feb. 15. — The most eventful day at the Groton school since Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., became ill closed with the departure of President Roosevelt for Washington late yesterday afternoon. Before that the president in the homely phrase, "Ted has improved with such rapid jumps that I am sure he is out of the woods," had told to the world of the load lifted from his mind. The day was full of happiness for the president and Mrs. Roosevelt, and, indeed, for all who were at the infirmary or near the school grounds. The first report from the bedside of young Roosevelt showed that he had passed a good night. After the morning examination by Doctors Lambert and Warren it was announced that the boy's condition was progressing favorably. The report said that the lungs were clearing well, although the patient was still in the second stage of pleuro-pneumonia, known to medical men as the stage of exudation. Later in the day Dr. Warren stated that the patient's temperature, respiration and pulse were normal, a decided contrast to his condition the past few days. The president passed a very quiet day. Yesterday morning after visiting his son he spent most of his time at the Gardner mansion transacting official business. Before lunch he called on the other patients, the Gammel and Potter boys, and cheered them up with his kindly greetings. At 4:15 p. m. the president, accompanied by Mr. Cortelyou, Mr. Barnes, the executive clerk, Principal Peabody of the school, and two secret officers, left in a carriage for Groton village station. A special train was in readiness there to take the party to Worcester. Many persons had gathered at the station, and, in response to their cheers, he doffed his hat. Mrs. Roosevelt kept indoors nearly all day. She has borne up well under the strain. She will be relieved somewhat during the next few days by Miss Alice Roosevelt, who, the president had said, would leave Washington to-day for Groton. He also said that Mrs. Roosevelt hoped to remove Theodore, Jr., to the White House within ten days, adding that the boy would return to Groton to complete his course as soon as his health would permit.

FIVE MEN KILLED.

Result of the Fight Between Officers and Mountaineers.

Middlesboro, Ky., Feb. 15.—The precise number of dead as the result of the battle at Lee Turner's saloon Wednesday at sunset is now believed to be five, although there are still reports that ten men were killed. Lee Turner is now at the mines. He intends to rebuild his saloon and fort and says he will remain if he has to keep a standing army of 500 mountaineers within his palisades. All is quiet now and it is believed for the present the troubles are over. Bones were found in the ruins of the burned saloon, but it is believed they are not human. A man named Russell is said to be missing.

Quarrel Ends in Shooting in Which Two Are Fatally Injured.

The men were drinking and quarreled about a trivial matter. Revolvers were drawn and fifteen shots were fired in the fusillade that followed. The affair created intense excitement.

WAHPETON UNIVERSITY.

Fine School Under the Management of President Robertson.

The long-wished-for 100 mark in the student enrollment of the Red River Valley university has been reached. This institution, like all others under denominational nurture, has had a long, hard pull to get recognition, and to secure respect throughout the sphere of its influence. It was founded in 1890, and was pioneered under Dr. M. V. B. Knox's presidency, until 1898, when Dr. Knox resigned to write a book, and the present president, E. P. Robertson, D. D., assumed control. The institution owns eighty acres of land, immediately north of the city, upon which is a building costing $40,000. The present indebtedness of the university is $12,500, to cancel which are written pledges bearing 6 per cent interest to the amount of $7,000. This leaves only $6,500 not fully provided for. $3,000 on conditional subscriptions being secured against this last debt.

The firm financial standing of the university has been gained largely through the persistent activity of President Robertson, who, in the past year, has raised $20,000. Dr. Robertson has a happy faculty of commanding the confidence and respect of all classes of people, and he does not antagonize the state institutions of higher learning, but feels that the building up of a denominational school, such as the Red River Valley university, is indispensable to a full scheme of education. He receives most cordial welcome in educational conventions all over the state, and has succeeded in raising the institution which he represents to a position of marked respect. Prof. Robertson secured his early education in the common schools of Freeborn county, Minnesota, and of Mitchell, Iowa; he taught common schools a few terms, attended Pillsbury academy one year, and graduated in 1885 from Hamline university. In 1898 he received a master's degree from Hamline, and in 1899 an honorary degree of D. D. He was a pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in Morris, Marshall, and finally, Rochester, and for six years a presiding elder, being one of the youngest men ever appointed to that position in Minnesota. Before coming to Wahpeton he was president of the post-graduate institute for the advanced standing of the Minnesota conference. While residing at Rochester he accepted the presidency of the Red River Valley university.

One of the Hamline students, later a teacher, Florence Jackson of Morristown, in the fall of 1885, became Mr. Robertson's wife. She is now preceptress of the university, and is a lady held in the highest estimation wherever known in the community.

TEACH FARMERS.

Prof. Haverstad in Charge of North Dakota Institutes.

Reports from the present series of farmers' institutes held in many towns in the northern and central parts of the state are that the meetings are universally successful. The rigid weather of the past two weeks has prevented the attendance of some of the farmers residing at a distance; but the gentlemen conducting the series are well pleased with the progress. Prof. T. A. Hoverstad of Minnesota has practical charge of the work for Prof. Kaufman, and, in addition to members of the faculty of the North Dakota agricultural college and members of the force at the experiment stations, he is assisted by prominent farmers who have made pronounced successes along certain lines.

One pleasing result of the institutes is the fact that many local institutes have been organized, in which local farmers will do the talking and exchange views on the methods of farming.

MALPRACTICE SUIT.

Retrial of Havron vs. Evans Commenced at Grafton.

A special term of court convened at Grafton for the trial of the Havron-Evans malpractice suit, Judge Kneeshaw presiding. The case was commenced last July, was partially tried, and then adjourned until September, but on account of the illness of a juror, the attorneys for the defense were unwilling to proceed. The jury was, accordingly, dismissed and the case set for retrial at the regular January term. The jury was empannelled at that time, but, owing to the West murder trial at Grand Forks, the defendant's counsel, Cochrane & Corliss, were unable to be present until now. The case will be a long one, involving much expert medical testimony.

Dr. P. U. La Berge, county health officer, reports a case of smallpox six miles west of Grafton, in the family of Samuel Fisher.

NO MORE WELLS.

Instead Jamestown May Install Its Own Pumping Plant.

The Jamestown city council, by a vote of 6 to 1, has decided to sink no more artesian wells. The council will investigate the matter of a pumping plant, and will secure the services of an engineer to make estimates of the amount it would cost to install and run such a plant. At present the water is pumped by the Jamestown Electric Light company, but the expense is heavy and there is dissatisfaction. There is a strong feeling that the city should own both the pumping station and the electric light plant, and it is likely this will be an issue in the spring campaign when a mayor and aldermen will be elected.

NOT ALL CAST DOWN.

Harrington Has a Job and Expects His Wife Back.

TO KEEP US OUT

SCHEME WAS AFOOT TO PREVENT AMERICAN CONTROL OF PHILIPPINES.

NEW STORY ANENT SPANISH WAR

GREAT BRITAIN CLAIMS THE CREDIT OF HAVING BLOCKED IT.

POWERS WERE FIXING A DEAL

OBJECT WAS TO FORCE UNITED STATES OUT OF THE ORIENT.

Washington, Feb. 15.—A new feature of the international controversy over the conduct of the powers toward the United States in the war with Spain has become public.

Great Britain now claims credit for having prevented a proposed concert of the powers which had for its object forcing the United States out of the Orient. It is declared that soon after the battle of Manila, when it was evident that the possession of the Philippines by the United States meant a permanent foothold for this country in the Orient, an attempt was made to secure the co-operation of the powers to force the United States to abandon permanent occupation of the Philippine archipelago.

It is further said that London was the scene of this anti-American activity. Efforts were made to get the British government to agree to a line of action against the permanent possession of the Philippines by the United States, and it was proposed that a joint note of the powers be sent to the United States to the effect that its continued occupation of Manila and the acquisition of the archipelago of the Philippines would not come within the scope of the cause of the war with Spain, which was primarily the securing of independence for Cuba.

The powers taking the initiative in this step insisted that the United States should be satisfied with securing the independence of Cuba and should not attempt to secure possession of territory in the Far East. It is asserted by British diplomats that Great Britain prevented this proposed concert of the powers.

CRANBORNE FURTHER EXPLAINS.

Pauncefote's Recommendation for an Identical Note to the United States Was Turned Down.

London, Feb. 15. — The parliamentary secretary for the foreign office, Lord Cranborne, replying in the house of commons to-day to a question of Henry Norman (Liberal) on the subject of the action of the British ambassador at Washington, Lord Pauncefote, April 14, 1898, said:

"The meeting which occurred April 14, 1898, was convened by Lord Pauncefote, as dean of the ambassadors, at the verbal suggestion of some of his colleagues. Whatever opinions were expressed by Lord Pauncefote during the discussion, which was of an informal character, were personal to himself and not pursuant to instructions from her majesty's government. The discussion resulted in an agreement to forward an identical telegram to their governments suggesting a further communication to the United States government. On receipt of this message her majesty's government immediately replied, objecting to the terms of the proposition as injudicious. Two days later Lord Pauncefote was informed that her majesty's government had decided to take no action. We at this time had no information of the attitude of the German government."

NOTED PIANIST COMING.

August Hyllestad, Teacher of Nobility, at Madison.

Madison, Wis., Feb. 15. — August Hyllestad, the renowned pianist, has arrived and taken the place in the university school of music left vacant by the death of the late Prof. James Sargent Smith. Mr. Hyllestad's work will, however, not be confined to the University of Wisconsin, as he expects to give some time to concert and other work in the larger neighboring cities, particularly St. Paul and Minneapolis. He came here directly from London, which he left Jan. 20, having appeared in a private piano recital before Queen Alexandra Jan 10. His reputation as a pianist extends to the foremost courts of Europe, before nearly all of whom he has played, and for five years he was the musical instructor of Princess Louise, sister of King Edward. He is a Swede by birth and studied for three years under Liszt at Weimar.

GERMAN ADMIRAL BUSY.

Receiving and Returning Calls Occupies His Time.

New York, Feb. 16. — Admiral von Baudissin, commander of the German imperial yacht Hohenzollern, was kept busy yesterday receiving and returning calls. In the morning, wearing full uniform, with many decorations, and accompanied by Lieut. von Wurtemberg, he called upon Mayor Adolph Lanker of Hoboken. The two conversed for a few minutes in German. Mutual compliments were then exchanged in English and the admiral was introduced to some of the city officials before he returned to the yacht. The mayor will return the call this afternoon. Maj. Gen. Brooke, commanding the department of the East, called on the admiral shortly before noon and was received with much ceremony. He spent some time with the German admiral in the latter's private cabin. At 2 o'clock Admiral Barker of the Brooklyn navy yard returned the call of Admiral von Baudissin, made the day previous. After the American admiral took his departure the German admiral left for New York in citizens' attire to make calls on several New York families he met at Kiel, Germany.

Unheeding Their Grave Danger, Hunters in a Row Boat Are Encircled by the Ice.

Chicago, Feb. 16. — Caught between huge floes of ice in the lake just off the Twelfth street pier yesterday afternoon, a boat occupied by three duck hunters who were preparing to return to shore, a half mile away, was crushed like an eggshell. The men were thrown into the water and one of them, William Olson, forty-five years old, was drowned, the other two being rescued after a desperate struggle. The men had been hunting all afternoon and as they were preparing to return to shore a mass of drift ice floated slowly toward them. Although the men saw the pack, which soon formed around them, they did not realize their danger until the ponderous cakes were almost upon them. Then they attempted to escape by rowing, but were too late.

WAS STOLEN BY INDIANS.

Billings (Mont.) Man Gets Trace of Lost Relatives.

Ottawa, Ont., Feb. 16.—Fred J. Mashaw of Billings, Mont., who claims to have been stolen by the St. Regis Indians when he was a child, wants to trace his relatives, who live near Ottawa, and also how his name is spelt. Lieut. Col. McLean of Cummings Bridge, on noticing the letter, wrote Mr. Mashaw that he knew a Joseph Michaud, who lived in North Plantagenet, and had removed to Castor river in Russell about the year 1847, who was said to have had a child stolen by the Indians in the early forties. It also turns out that Napoleon Michaud of 217 Rochester street, Ottawa, is a nephew of the "old lost boy," and that he has a brother, Xavier Michaud, in Masonville, Delta county, Mich. These facts have been communicated to Mashaw.

A policeman made the arrest on his own responsibility, and while taking Ratzman to the station was intercepted by two marines who pleaded for a chance to chastise the prisoner.

BURNS HIS SISTER

HORRIBLE DEPRAVITY OF A PRECOCIOUS DEGENERATE IN INDIANA.

DELIBERATELY APPLIES MATCH

BABY A CHARRED AND BLACKENED CORPSE WHEN FOUND BY MOTHER.

SHOWS NO CONCERN AT DEED

PREVIOUSLY GIVEN STARTLING EVIDENCES OF A DEPRAVED MIND.

Hammond, Ind., Feb. 16.—Willie Nowak, a precocious degenerate, yesterday deliberately set fire to the clothing of his baby sister here, and as a result the fifteen-months-old baby is a charred and blackened corpse.

The young degenerate is but three years old, but he has exhibited in the past startling evidences of a depraved mind. He is bright and precocious beyond the ordinary, yet the little fellow's companions fear him and his case furnishes an interesting study for psychic criminologists.

The baby's mother left the two children alone while she went to a grocery a few blocks from the house to do some shopping. She was absent about twenty minutes, but during her stay the three-year-old had procured matches from a cupboard and dropped two or three lighted ones into the flimsy garments of the babe.

The frantic mother arrived in time to see the kitchen floor ablaze beneath the baby and its body charred beyond recognition. The boy showed no concern at his crime, and the testimony adduced at the inquest showed that he knew what he was about.

He found his wife on the floor, insensible, when he reached home. It was some time after his arrival before she gained consciousness and was able to talk. Robbery is supposed to have been the motive, as it was discovered that $45 in money had been taken from a trunk.

WILL FIGHT FIRE.

Insurance Companies Raise Rates and Towns Hustle.

Fargo, N. D., Feb. 16.—The fire insurance men of the state do not give the people of the smaller towns much peace these days. The oft-repeated threats of raising the rates of insurance have been made good in some towns and other places are anticipating orders of that nature. The agitation has resulted in the adoption of some system of fire fighting in the more progressive towns. The chemical engines seem to be the favorites where there is a lack of water.

He came to Bemidji yesterday to get a tooth pulled, and in leaving last night fell off a log train. The body was dragged under the wheels a long distance.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XVI. (Continued.)

He took the somewhat reluctant Cornelius by the arm and led him out of the bar and up the dark stairs which led to the upper rooms. As Mr. Taggett always talked at the top of his voice, and he was in the present instance, very anxious to be jovial and friendly with this most unwelcome visitor, their progress was not a silent or secret one; and the noise Mr. Taggett made attracted the attention of a watcher in a certain dark passage beneath them.

That watcher was Mr. Nugent Leathwood. For something more than an hour he had fretted and fumed about the yard at the rear of the premises, waiting, as arranged, for a signal from Cornelius; but that gentleman had, as has been mentioned, fallen half-asleep and forgotten all about it. Gradually, Nugent had ventured into the house, cursing the darkness and Cornelius, and everything and everyone that had anything to do with his discomfort. At last, just when he had made up his mind to walk in boldly and ask for Mr. Veevers, he heard the voce of that gentleman and the louder tones of Anthony Taggett.

Suspicious of everyone with whom he had to deal, it flashed upon him that this old man had sold him—had gone over to the other side, probably to save himself. He tried to dismiss the suspicion the next moment; but it clung to him, and he determined to play the spy and to hear, if possible, what was said. Very silently, he crept up the dark stairs in the wake of the two men, and watched them enter a room together, the door of which was carefully closed after them.

Nugent Leathwood went past that door, fumbled along the wall until he touched another handle, evidently attached to the door of an adjoining room. Opening this very cautiously, he found himself in complete darkness, save for a little streak of light coming through the crack of a door at the side of the room. Creeping up to this, he found that it was one of a pair of folding doors, giving on to the room into which Cornelius had gone with Anthony Taggett. Nugent softly struck a light, and found that he was in a very small room, littered with old packing cases and decrepit furniture, and evidently used merely as a lumber room.

"No one will come here," he whispered to himself. "Now, Cornelius, if you are playing me false, Heaven have mercy on you!"

Meanwhile, in the lighted room Anthony Taggett had set out a bottle and glasses, and was urging his newly-found friend to drink, whether with the object of reducing him again to that condition in which he had found him in the little bar down stairs or not, it is impossible to say. Perhaps he had a faint hope that, if Cornelius had really come there in search of Olive, he might be induced to forget his purpose, if he were made drunk enough.

The better to beguile the time, Mr. Taggett plunged into an account of some of his adventures, on the boards and off, and further enlivened the time by discoursing about that wonderful drama, which was ever in mind, and which was probably destined never to be finished.

Now, the brain of Mr. Taggett was a fertile one, and the mere presence of Cornelius had brought back to his mind the remembrance of that ghastly burial in the garden of Rickeby's Folly, at what time Mr. Taggett himself had been wrapped in a sheet. Of course, he dared not refer to that, for obvious reasons; but it set his mind at work, and plunged him at once into new ideas for his wonderful drama.

"I cannot, of course, truthfully say that this drama exists on paper," he said, after a long preamble concerning it. "No; but it is absolutely formed in my mind. Already, in fact, I tread the stage and utter the words which were given to the chief character to speak; already I slide down precipices or plunge across foaming torrents. My last idea, if I remember rightly, in regard to the first act was that the hero should come in on a patechnicon, with real horses, but I am inclined to change that. I intend to begin with a mysterious murder."

Cornelius had been fast dropping into slumber again; but Mr. Taggett uttered the last word with such startling effect that he jumped up and sat upright—very wide-awake indeed.

"Yes—with a mysterious murder," repeated Anthony Taggett. "It has been done, I admit; but not as I should do it. I should, I think, use something out of the common—such, for instance, as a mummy-case."

"A what?" asked Cornelius, staring at him.

"I repeat—a mummy-case; in that the body would be hidden," said Mr. Taggett, speaking with great earnestness.

"Oh, you would hide the body, would you?" said Cornelius. He picked up his glass and gulped down some of its contents, staring, wide-eyed, at Taggett all the while. "Ha, ha!—please go on. This is really very interesting."

"Yes, I thought you would find it so," responded Mr. Taggett; much gratified, and warming to his subject. "In fact, now I come to consider the matter more carefully, why should I use such an out-of-the-way thing as a mummy-case?"

"Ah, why, indeed?" exclaimed Mr. Veevers. "Try something else."

"I will!" cried Taggett, shaking hands with him with great fervor. "Mummy-cases are not found among the domestic appurtenances of every household. Why not use a cupboard?"

Mr. Veevers rose slowly from his chair and began, almost imperceptibly, to edge away around the table. Mr. Taggett, taking his fright to be caused by the mere horror of the suggestion, went on with greater gusto than ever.

"Ah, I see that startles you, eh? Think of the effect, My dear Mr. Veevers; think of the effect on the audience when that cupboard is opened; think—"

Mr. Veevers swayed against the table and made a sort of blind hit at him, missed, and brought his fist down heavily on the table instead, upsetting one of the glasses.

"Stop it—d'ye 'ear?" he said, in a hoarse whisper. "Let's 'ave no more of it, or, by Jove, I'll do you a mischief—you and your cupboards and your murders and your heaven-knows what! What are you talking about, eh? Come—out with it! What do you know?"

The astonished Mr. Taggett had started back at the first onslaught upon him, and now stood, gazing in astonishment, at Cornelius, whose wild appearance and haggard face were sufficiently startling in themselves without his words. Mr. Taggett, however, had no suspicion in his mind but that the situation he had suggested had been so dramatically strong that it had moved his hearer in this strange fashion; or, on the other hand, he thought it possible that Cornelius had drunk rather more than was good for him. Accordingly, he spoke soothingly.

"Nay, nay, my good friend. I did but speak of something that might be—something which has no real existence. As I have said, the thing has probably been done—"

"How do you know it's been done?" asked Cornelius, sharply. "Who are you, to come spyin' on honest folk, and talkin' about dead men in cupboards? You've been mixin' your drinks, Mr. Play-actor, or you've been gettin' a nightmare. 'Ere, let me go; I've 'ad enough of you to-night. Let me go!"

He strode towards the door and went quickly out, shutting it behind him, and leaving the astonished Taggett staring in perplexity. Outside the door, Cornelius, in the dark, suddenly felt his arm gripped, and a hand was slipped over his lips to prevent him from crying out.

"Hold your noise," whispered Leathwood. "This is the dealiest hole of all. Don't explain, I've heard everything. It's evident that he knows the whole story. Come down stairs; I can't breathe here!"

Outside, in the cool, night, they stood looking into each other's faces. Nugent triefly explained how he had got into the house and how he had managed to overhear the conversation.

"That ain't the worst," said Cornelius. "That fellow that pretended 'e was my son 'as turned up again; says 'e saw you in the town 'ere to-day. It's my belief that 'e's doin' a little private detective work on 'is own."

"Yes, the nets are closing in," said Nugent, gloomily. "I had forgotten about that fellow, Reeks."

"Go 'ome; 'e wants money. I 'eard 'im say 'e was going to take the papers to you to-night."

"That sounds better," replied Nugent, after a short pause. "I must have these papers—whatever happens. I don't know whose hands they may fall into. This changes all my plans; we'll start for London at once. If he wants the money, he's sure to wait for me. Yes—we'll go to London."

"Then you won't bother about the gel?" asked Cornelius, in a tone of relief.

"Won't I?" Leathwood gave a short laugh. "Do you think I am the sort of man to be beaten by people of the stamp of this Reeks? He's gone; the girl is left in the hands of the Taggetts. I am going, as I have said, to London to-night; but I don't go without the girl. I'll get her and the papers; then I'll make a bolt out of England. But I don't go without the girl!"

CHAPTER XVII.

The Dead Alive.

Despite the brave air with which Nugent Leathwood carried off the matter with Cornelius, he was really in deadly fear for his own safety. As he had said, with more truth than he suspected, the net was, indeed, closing about him; watchful eyes seemed to encompass him, and he felt that there was no man or woman whom he could really trust. As he passed away from the inn with Cornelius, he stumbled against a man who was coming down a little side street towards it; with a muttered apology, the man stepped aside, apparently, without noticing him, went on and entered the inn. But as he passed Nugent, the light from a street lamp, fixed against the corner of the wall, fell full upon his face. Leathwood started and caught Cornelius by the arm.

"Did you see that fellow?" he whispered.

"Didn't notice 'im," repleid the other. "What about 'im?"

"It's very strange," muttered Leathwood to himself, still looking in the direction the man had taken; "very strange, indeed. I know his face somewhere—I'll swear I know his face!"

"Well, I wouldn't stand mumblin' about it 'ere, if I was you," retorted Cornelius. "Let's know what you're going to do, and let's get it done; it's too cold to stand about 'ere all night."

Still, the face he had seen in the semi-darkness seemed to haunt the younger man; even when he turned away, and walked along beside Cornelius, he thought about it, and turned the recollection over in his mind. And at last, when he had gone some little distance from the inn, he stopped suddenly—stopped, in unmistakable terror.

"I know him now!" he cried. "Cornelius, do you remember me telling you of a man I saw at the hospital—the man who picked up Miles Probyn in the street—the man who followed him to the grave with me, when we buried him as Gilbert Rickerby?"

"Yes, I remember," replied Cornelius. "The chap that gave the name of George Reeks."

"That's the man. And that man who ran against us just now, and who has gone into the inn where they all are, is the same man." He stopped in the street, and his face was white and drawn as he faced the old man. "In Heaven's name, Cornelius, what does it all mean?" he asked. "To-night it has almost seemed that the secret of the ghastly thing we did is known."

"Seems like it," replied Cornelius, coolly.

"And now there comes upon the scene this mysterious man, who gave what must have been a false name and disappeared immediately. His coming here to-night and going to that place is no more matter of chance; there's some fiendish plot working out here against us, of which we know nothing. Cornelius, I'm afraid we stand upon a somewhat thin crust of earth, which may crack and let us through at any moment."

"You're gettin' into bad 'abits again," said Mr. Veevers, slowly. "I warned you, not long ago to get out of the way of talking about 'us' and 'we.' You've got yourself into a precious mess, Mr. Leathwood, and you think you're a-goin' to pull me into it, too. No, thank you; none of your thin crusts for me. I stand on solid earth, I'd 'ave you know, and my 'ads are clean."

Nugent Leathwood was in no mood for distinctions or differences at that moment; with a savage oath, he sprang at the old man, and caught him by the collar and shook him to and fro vigorously. "You old dog!" he muttered; "so you think you'll desert me because everyone else does—do you. I'll teach you that this is a different matter. Remember, the old man who saw that business is dead: and if I swing for it, your ugly carcass shall swing with me. You twisted demon! so you think you'll save your skin, do you? Your only chance to save yourself is to save me. So, you'd better stick to me. You've learned before this that I'm not to be played with: if I go under for this thing, I'll have company. If I ever found that you'd sold me, I'd break the strongest gaol ever built to get at you and tear the life out of you." He gave him one last, vigorous shake, and sent him staggering against a wall.

"You're too 'asty—much too 'asty," said Cornelius, feebly, when he had got his breath again. "You don't suppose—you couldn't think for a minute that I'd be the sort of man to turn round on anyone, could you?"

"Yes, I could!" snarled Leathwood. "A fine friend you are to talk of slipping out when the first sign of danger comes. Why, you'd sell your own brother—you know you would! But you shan't sell me—understand that!"

"I never meant to sell no one," whimpered Cornelius, shouldering himself against the wall to get as far as possible out of the way of Leathwood.

"Well, we'll say you didn't. Now, the question is, what are we going to do? For my part, I intend to wait until these people are in bed or, at all events, to watch for an opportunity when the girl is alone. Mind, it's risky business, but that little fool, Reeks, is far away, and we ought to be able to manage it pretty easily. Oh, it'll be a matter of force this time; something thrown over her head, so that we can get her away without screams or noise. Only I don't mean to be baffled; it's the bold man who wins in a game of this kind, and I'll be bold enough when necessary."

They agreed that it would be necessary for them to get into the inn before it closed; and it was arranged that Cornelius should go on in front, to be sure that no one was about, and should then smuggle Leathwood into the room he had engaged; that they should both wait there until an opportunity presented itself for the abduction.

"And I won't take her back to Rickerby's Folly this time," said Leathwood. "You shall take her across country somewhere, where I'll join you, after I have secured these papers. After that—well, never mind what will happen after that."

He had been on the point of suggesting to Cornelius the idea that he had had in his mind so long—that that worthy should undertake the disposal of the body that had been placed in the empty house. But he decided not to mention it at that moment; Cornelius had already shown signs of rebellion, and must, evidently, be dealt with gently.

They got back into the inn in a sort of skirmishing order, Cornelius first and Leathwood coming after him, lurking in the shadows. There was no one about, and they gained Mr. Veever's room in safety, and locked the door and sat down to perfect their plans.

The first thing to do was to get a carriage of some sort; Cornelius was dispatched to negotiate that part of the business. He came back within a very little time, and declared that it was quite impossible to get any vehicle at all.

"All the places are closed," he reported; "and the two inns who profess to do posting say they can't turn out anything till the morning. You'll 'ave to give up the gel; you've got quite enough on your 'ands without 'er."

"I won't give her up!" replied Nugent, doggedly. "I know what we can do: our one object is to get the girl out of this house, and out of the hands of those who are friendly disposed towards her. I know what money will do; you go about these things in too niggardly a fashion."

"Not when I'm spending someone else's money," retorted Cornelius. "You don't know these 'ere places; I offered 'em any money they liked—an' they laughed at me. Can't you see what a hole you're in, without runnin' into fresh danger? This chap, Ubbard, is about Barnet, watchin' us; that play-actor fellow 'as got wind of the business some'ow; within an hour or two we'll 'ave 'em all on our track. What's gels w'en yer neck's in danger? I tell you—"

"There, don't talk, don't talk!" broke in Leathwood, impatiently. "I want to think about this business—to understand what is best to be done. I'm not such a craven as you; I don't give in at the first danger signal that happens to flash before my eyes. I want to think—I want to think. But I can't here, in this cheerless room without something to help me. What have you got to drink?"

"I don't keep bottles up 'ere," said Cornelius. "But I can get what you like from down below. I don't mind admittin' I'm dry myself. What shall it be?"

Nugent Leathwood did not appear to hear what he said for a moment; even when he looked up and spoke it was with the air of a man whose thoughts were far away. "Oh, anything, anything; get some brandy. All these things crowding on me at once, have taken the nerve out of me somehow; I want bracing up. Yes, get some brandy."

There was no hesitation about Cornelius when he set out on that errand. In a few minutes he re-entered the room with a bottle of brandy, some glasses and water. Nugent half-filled a tumbler with the neat spirit and drank it off, blinked and coughed a little, and then smiled on the other man.

"That's the stuff!" he cried. "It puts heart into a man, Cornelius. I was rough with you just now—said things I ought not to have said. Forget it; I didn't think what I was saying."

"Don't mention it," said Cornelius, drily, looking at his master and then at the bottle. "I don't mind."

"I'm driven into a corner, Cornelius," went on Nugent; "but they'll find me with my back to the wall. I'm fighting for a big stake, and I'll fight to the death. Pour me out some more brandy and help yourself."

Neither of them thought of the water; Nugent, because he wanted to be worked up to a certain pitch; Cornelius, because water in any shape did not appeal to him. But is must be remembered that the younger man was excited, and threw off whatever effect the spirit might have had easily enough; the old man was cool enough, and drank for the sake of drinking. So that, natrally enough, in a short time Cornelius came under the influence of what he had taken, while Nugent, for the best part, paced about the room and, save that his face was flushed and his eyes bright, appeared none the worse. Only, as the glass was emptied, Nugent Leathwood had bred in him a certain dangerous mocking demon that might carry him far, and carry him recklessly over anything. The old man merely became somnolent.

"Fate plays strange tricks with men," said Nugent, with a laugh. "Here we stand to-night—you and I—with our work nearly finished, with this girl in the same house with ourselves, and only a chuckle-headed old barnstormer and his wife to keep guard over her. On that night when I killed Gilbert Rickerby I set out to do a thing few men would have dared; I put my hand to a work that would have appalled the stoutest. Do you hear me, Cornelius?"

Cornelius was almost too far gone to hear anything, but he sat up at the summons, and murmured, sleepily: "Jus' so, jus' so, master. You'll win yet!"

"Win! I should think I would! Do you think I fooled an old man in his dotage for nothing? Do you think I schemed to keep Gilbert Rickerby away from home, and from England, for nothing? Why, what is there to fear? A few simple fools, who can be bought at the price I like to suggest; a helpless girl, without a real friend or relative in the world. Cornelius—do you hear what I say?"

He walked across to the old man and shook him roughly by the shoulder. Mr. Veevers rolled his heavy head about once or twice, and then dropped it forward on the table. Nugent fell back from him and surveyed him frowningly.

"I wonder if you're to be trusted," he muttered. "I can't trust any man now—I dare not. The only thing that keeps this creature loyal to me is the thought that I can pay him well for his silence. Suppose he knew that I have scarcely a penny in the world; that the fortune left in my hands for Gilbert Rickerby was squandered long ago; that the money I am supposed to pay for these papers which are to be brought to me, has already been broken into for necessary expenses! Would he stick to me then? Oh, Heaven! What a position is mine, tahi I can only hold the noose from my neck with hands filled with gold; that there is not on earth one creature to-night who would stretch out a hand for love of me to save me!"

He poured out some more brandy and drank it off; and that softer mood passed from him. A more reckless one took its place—a mood in which he was prepared to do anything, and to dare anything, to gain what he wanted. He came across to where the old man sat, with his head on the table, and looked at him critically; he had to steady himself by the table as he did so, for the room was swaying around him as he strove to stand upright.

"Asleep," he muttered. "Why should I wait; why should I not have the full advantage of what is offered me? This girl—alone and friendless—out of her mind, they say—why should I not?" He began to move unsteadily about the room in his growing excitement. "A lucky chance has brought me to the very place where she is. I am no milk-and-water creature, to stand aside for questions of right or wrong; I love her—by the sheer right of conquest she is mine. Her lover is dead; there is no one in the world to whom she can turn. She is mine—she is mine!"

He stumbled toward the door, turned the key and pulled it open; closed it again and went back to the table. He picked up his glass and emptied the fiery stuff down his throat; then made again for the door. On the threshold of it he paused and tried to steady himself and to know where he was.

"Let me think—let me think. Cornelius said that the room was to the right of this—the third door. Third door! Now, my Sleeping Beauty—no need to run away with you—no need—"

He was out in the darkness of the corridor, groping with his hand along the wall. The door of the room in which he had been had swung to behind him; the darkness was profound. Suddenly, as his hand groped along the wall, he touched the lintel of a door. One!

He paused and laughed, and went on again; touched another lintel. Two! Once again, and his hand crept on in the darkness—missed the wall—and touched something soft and yielding—cloth! Even in his drunken condition, the change was sufficient to bring him up with a shock; he stretched out his hand again; there was no mistaking what it was. Someone was standing there, quite calmly against the wall, barring the way.

He stopped and dropped his hand; spoke in a husky whisper. "Why—who's there?" he asked.

He stretched out his hand again and touched the same immovable body. Then, from out the pitchy darkness, a voice spoke:

"What do you want, Nugent Leathwood?"

The thing was ruman, after all; Nugent Leathwood began to pull his courage together. "Who the deuce are you?" he asked. "What are you standing there for in the dark; who are you?"

"You shall learn in good time," replied the voice. "Go back to your room."

"I'll go where I please," said Nugent, "And I'll see your face!"

He stepped back a pace, fumbled with his match box and struck a light, lurched forward with it, and flared the tiny taper in the face of the man who stood in the way. It was the face of that mysterious creature who had followed Miles Probyn to the grave, and who had passed Leathwood in the street that night. He dropped the match and stood quite still, sobered by the meeting.

"Well, are you any the wiser? Do you know me?" asked the other.

"Yes; I know you. You are the man who called yourself George Reeks—the man who followed—followed Gilbert Rickerby to the grave. Who are you?"

The strange man seemed to laugh in the darkness. "You seem to know all about me," he replied, "and I think I know something about you. At the present moment you think you are on your way to the room occupied by Miss Olive Mallory; as a matter of fact, you are going back to your own."

Despite the darkness, Nugent Leathwood had enough of bravery in him to try a little bluster. "Indeed," he said; "you seem to know a great deal about my movements. Once again—who are you, and what have you to do with Miss Olive Mallory?"

"This." The strange man seemed to have moved nearer; Leathwood could almost feel his warm breath on his face. "That I constitute myself the protector of a young and innocent girl whom you have persecuted enough; that I know, Nugent Leathwood, who you are and what you have done; even in this black darkness I can see the blood on your hands."

Leathwood started back with a faint cry. "Are you a man or a fiend?" he whispered. "What are you talking about?"

"Listen again. You are going back to Rickerby's Folly; you dare not stay away from the place any longer. Nugent Leathwood, there is work to be done there—something to be hidden. Go back to Rickerby's Folly; you have to meet someone there."

"What do you mean? Who are you? Out of what unknown place have you sprung? What are you doing here in the dark at this time of the night?"

(To Be Continued.)

THE NERVOUS NEW YORKER.

Tendency to Talk to Himself Becoming More Noticeable.

One of the most marked outward manifestations that the New Yorker gives of the high nervous tension under which he lives, is his habit of talking aloud to himself in the street. This habit is one of the first things that observers of street life in New York notice. It is a form of nervousness that is due not only to the high pressure at which so many New Yorkers are kept, but to the noise of the street traffic. When the rush and rumble of the streets is so great that a man cannot "hear himself think," he speaks his thoughts aloud. It is only rarely that a woman is observed doing this. Sometimes the man who is talking to himself—if he is happy—will mumble only half-sentences and phrases audibly. If he is angry or deeply concerned, he will speak steadily, and sometimes make emphatic gestures. But nearly all of the men who talk aloud in the streets have their business affairs uppermost in their minds, and the word "dollars" is the one that is oftenest heard. Down town, in the financial section, this habit of a large number of New Yorkers is particularly noticeable; but one may observe it in almost any part of the town. Paris is possibly the only one of the great cities of the world where the habit is so noticeable as it is here. Actors and writers and the many minor poets of the French capital may be seen declaiming their lines or verses, unheeding their observers.—New York Evening Post.

Wall Paper and Smallpox.

The Paperhangers' union is urging the passage of a law against covering up old wall paper in repapering rooms. It claims that the present epidemic of smallpox may be traced to this bad custom. The union explicitly disavows any self-interest, because, it says, no member of a union will scrape a wall. The report does not say that while thus urging, any tendency toward smiling was rigidly extinguished or concealed, nor does it explain why, if germs live in old paper for years, much repapering that is now not done would be demanded in the interest of preventive medicine. In aid of the paperhangers, and of the scrapers, also, as well as in that of the public health, we agree that frequent repapering is advisable. The appeal of the union is, in a general way, a valid one, even if its logic is not so clear. By all means, scrape and repaper all walls frequently, especially if the rooms have been occupied by those suffering from infectious diseases.—American Medicine.

Celery by the Carload.

"The celery that we are getting now," said a wholesale produce dealer, "comes mostly from California, and carload lots are common shipments. Go over into the railroad freight yards across the North River at this season, any day, and you will find there, just received, ten or fifteen carloads of celery.

"We get New York State celery in quantities from September to Christmas. California celery begins to come in from the 10th to the 20th of December and lasts until April. We begin to get Florida celery in the middle of March, and when Florida stops we begin to get it from Ohio and Michigan and New York again; in the greatest quantity from the western part of the state.

"So, from one source and another, within our own country, we now get celery, as we do so many other vegetables, the year round."—New York Sun.

Latter-Day Miracles.

Plumperaquat—Yes; I believe a French chef has ben known to make a palatable dish out of a package of health food.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Low Rates to the Northwest.

Beginning March 1st, and every day thereafter during the months of March and April, 1902, the Great Northern Railway will sell one-way second-class settlers' tickets at very low rates to almost all points on its main line west of St. Paul and Minneapolis. Low rates will also be made in connection with the Great Northern from Chicago.

The rate from St. Paul, Minneapolis and other Eastern terminals, to Montana points is from $15 to $20; to points in Washington, $22.50 to $25. The rate from Chicago to Montana points is from $25 to $30, and the highest rate to points in Washington is $33. Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

CONQUERS PAIN!

TO MOTHERS

Mrs. J. H. Haskins, of Chicago, Ill., President Chicago Arcade Club, Addresses Comforting Words to Women Regarding Childbirth.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Mothers need not dread childbearing after they know the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. While I loved children I dreaded the ordeal, for it left me weak and sick for months after, and at the time I thought death was a welcome relief; but before my last child was born a good neighbor advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I used that, together with your Pills and Sanative Wash for four months before the child's birth;—it brought me wonderful relief. I hardly had an ache or pain, and when the child was ten days old I left my bed strong in health. Every spring and fall I now take a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find it keeps me in continual excellent health."—MRS. J. H. HASKINS, 3248 Indiana Ave., Chicago, Ill.—$5000 forfeit if above testimonial is not genuine.

THE ISTHMIAN CANAL

EASTERN PAPER SAYS THE SCHEME IS AN OLD ONE.

Spanish Monarch Planned the Work One Hundred Years Before the Pilgrim Fathers Landed at Plymouth—Had to Be Given Up.

So we are to have an isthmian canal at last. It will seem odd to have a session of Congress without debates on that subject. The scheme is three times as old as the nation that is to carry it out.

The report of the isthmian canal commission is prefaced by an interesting review of the history of this project. The early explorers, as is well known, thought that they were going to be able to sail from Europe westward, straight to India. When they found a continent in the way, they thought for a long time that there must surely be some natural passage through it. But within seven years after the discovery of the Pacific by Balboa, the idea of connecting the two oceans by a ship canal had begun to take shape, says the Philadelphia Evening Post.

In 1520, just one hundred years before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth, Charles V. ordered surveys for such a canal to be made at Panama. The project was revived by another royal decree in 1534. The Tehauntepec, Nicaragua, Panama and Darien routes were all urged as they have been nearly four hundred years later. In 1780, during the American revolution, Nelson was engaged in naval operations against the Spanish territories at Nicaragua, and he anticipated almost the very words of the advocates of the Nicaragua canal at the present day.

In 1814 the Spanish cortes voted to authorize the construction of a canal for vessels of the largest size, but circumstances compelled Spain to relinquish the enterprise.

As soon as the Spanish-Americans had secured their independence they promptly turned their attention to the canal question. In 1825 the young Republic of Central America notified the United States that an American company was ready to undertake the construction of the Nicaragua canal, and urged the conclusion of a treaty to promote the scheme. The inter-oceanic canal question was one of the chief subjects of discussion in the Panama congress of 1826. At that time the Republic of Central America had entered into a contract with the sanguine American company, the forerunner of so many others. The company agreed to begin work within twelve months, if possible, but at any rate, within six months afterward. That was just three-quarters of a century ago, and the canal is still patiently waiting. But now that Uncle Sam has taken hold of the undertaking things will probably begin to move.

TROUBLES OF A TRAVELER.

Gave the Conductor a Chance to Make a Witty Retort.

"I have almost become accustomed to the pranks played by the motormen of Brooklyn trolley cars on the long suffering traveling public," observed a resident of that borough the other day, "but I most strenuously object to being insulted by the conductor in the bargain. I boarded a 'standing room only' trolley car yesterday, and had just got inside the door and was looking about for a nice strap, on which to hang, when the motorman gave us a short stop. It meant a quick start for me. I went sailing through the car as if I'd been sent for. You couldn't have passed me with anything unless it had been thrown. I landed against the front door with a thud, and was just getting my bearings when the rascal on the front end did it all over again. It didn't seem so far going back, but when I crashed into the rear door the conductor yanked it open and snarled:

"'Do you want to get out here?'

"'No,' said I. 'I want to stay in.'

"'Well,' said he, 'if you want to ride on this car you'll have to stop running up and down the aisle.'

"'I'd be a bird if I could do that,' said I.

"'Well, be a bird,' said he, 'but light somewhere.'"—New York Tribune.

Snow From a Clear Sky.

The most wonderful snowstorms of all that may be seen every winter in the Adirondacks are those that prevail when the sky is cloudless. Of these there are several varieties. Every week or two we would see what looked like a fog form about the distant hills, and then come drifting across the creek valley. Doubtless it was a real snow-laden cloud that had been drifting along until it struck our level (1,300 feet above the sea) in the Adirondacks, when the conditions became favorable for the release of its feathery burden, says a writer in Scribner's. We saw these clouds fill the air with flakes that were driven along almost horizontally by a strong gale, although the tops of our old hemlocks and spruce rose into the clear air and obstructed sunlight above the highest level of the snow-producing air stratum. We even saw the snow so thick trees six feet above the earth were not in the air about us that the trunks of visible, although the treetops could be seen, and the sun shone down through the shallow storm with strength enough to cast distinct shadows. We have stood on a quiet, sunlit hilltop, and looked down into a valley less than 100 feet below us, where a snowstorm was raging with violence, and the temperature was frigid.

WHY HE HAD NERVES.

Harvard Student's Excuse for Delaying the Dentist's Work.

"A dentist's chair is not a popular retreat," says a practitioner, "but I occasionally find persons who like to linger. I have just finished a job for a youngster who is a Harvard freshman. He came in the day after Christmas, and contracted to have his teeth fixed, but said that hard study had undermined his nerves, and he could only stand two sittings a week. He looked as healthy and hearty as an ox, but I did not mind. Three days ago his father dropped in and asked:

"'Doctor, can't you hurry up on Fred's teeth?'

"'Certainly, said I, 'if his nervous system will stand it. He said it made him nervous, and that he could only stand it twice a week.'

"'Nervous system be blanked!' shouted the old man. 'At home Fred said that twice a week was all the time you could give him. He is playing his teeth to put two weeks more on his vacation.'

"I finished that job in the next twenty-four hours, and the young man did not have a grin coming to him after the first five minutes in the chair."

The Origin of the Sabbath.

The Sabbath as a religious institution is far older than the Pentateuchal legislation. It, too, can be traced back to a Babylonian prototype, not, however, as a day of rest from labor, but as a kind of atonement day, when, by various rites and by observing certain restricted regulations, the anger of the gods could be appeased. On this old institution the Hebrews ingrafted their religious ideas and produced the unique institution of a day observed as a respite from the week's toil, and which, from being an "inauspicious" occasion, a dies irae, is viewed as a "delight."—Prof. Morris Jastrow, in Independent.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN WHO ENDORSE PERUNA.

MISS MATTIE DOUGLASS
MISS LENORE ALLEN.

Miss Lenore Allen, 407 Dowell Street, San Francisco, Cal., writes:

"I consider Peruna an infallible remedy for catarrhal diseases. For several years I have been troubled with influenza, especially during our rainy season. I used to catch cold so easily that I was afraid to be out when the weather was the least bit inclement, or in the evening air. But since I have used Peruna I have nothing whatever the matter with me.

"I am in perfect health, and find that Peruna acts as a tonic, and seems to throw all sickness and disease out of the body. I go anywhere now and in all kinds of weather, seem to have an iron constitution and enjoy life because I enjoy perfect health." LENORE ALLEN.

Miss Mattie Douglass, 138 Thomas Ave., Memphis, Tenn., writes:

"From my early womanhood I have been troubled with occasional headaches. I took different powders and drugs, at times getting temporary relief. One of my friends advised me to try Peruna, which I did. I soon found that my general health improved, and my entire system was toned up.

"I felt a buoyancy of body and lightness of mind I had not known before, and my headaches has entirely disappeared, and I have enjoyed perfect health for over a year. I gladly endorse Peruna."

-MATTIE DOUGLASS.

Women from all parts of the United States and Canada are testifying daily to the virtue of Peruna. Only a few of these letters can ever be published. Write for a book of testimonials, of the cures Peruna has made.

Peruna Makes Clean, Healthy Mucous Membranes — Catarrhal Diseases Disappear Permanently.

The mucous membrane is to the inside of the body what the skin is to the outside of the body. It lines every organ, duct and cavity. Catarrhal inflammation attacking one part is liable to spread to other parts. A neglected cold or slight catarrh is often the cause of lingering and dangerous catarrh.

Women are naturally more susceptible to inclemencies of the weather than men. With them a cold is often the starting point of some severe pelvic derangement, causing much pain and suffering.

Every woman needs a remedy upon which she can rely to keep her system fortified against the trying weather of winter and early spring. If Peruna is taken at the first symptom of a cold it will cure it before it develops into some annoying catarrhal derangement.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

WOMAN'S GENTLE NATURE CALLS FOR GENTLE TREATMENT

Delicately formed and gently reared, women will find, in all the seasons of their lives, as maids or wives or mothers, that the one simple, wholesome remedy which acts gently and pleasantly and naturally, and which may be used with truly beneficial effects, under any conditions, when the system needs a laxative—is—Syrup of Figs. It is well known to be a simple combination of the laxative and carminative principles of plants with pleasant, aromatic liquids, which are agreeable and refreshing to the taste and acceptable to the system when its gentle cleansing is desired.

Many of the ills from which women suffer are of a transient nature and do not come from any organic trouble and it is pleasant to know that they yield so promptly to the beneficial effects of Syrup of Figs, but when anything more than a laxative is needed it is best to consult the family physician and to avoid the old-time cathartics and loudly advertised nostrums of the present day. When one needs only to remove the strain, the torpor, the congestion, or similar ills, which attend upon a constipated condition of the system, use the true and gentle remedy—Syrup of Figs—and enjoy freedom from the depression, the aches and pains, colds and headaches, which are due to inactivity of the bowels.

Only those who buy the genuine Syrup of Figs can hope to get its beneficial effects and as a guarantee of the excellence of the remedy the full name of the company—California Fig Syrup Co.—is printed on the front of every package and without it any preparation offered as Syrup of Figs is fraudulent and should be declined. To those who know the quality of this excellent laxative, the offer of any substitute, when Syrup of Figs is called for, is always resented by a transfer of patronage to some first-class drug establishment, where they do not recommend, nor sell false brands, nor imitation remedies. The genuine article may be bought of all reliable druggists everywhere at 50 cents per bottle.

THE NEWS,

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Crookston is making a determined effort to secure the army post for that city. A better location could not be found in the state of Minnesota.

President Roosevelt is contemplating extending the term of of fourth class postmasters for life, or during good behavior. This would undoubtedly improve the postal system, and keep the office free from politics.

Ray W. Jones, of Frazee, is said to be a candidate for the Republican nomination of lieutenant governor. Mr. Jones was prominently connected with the early history of Thief River Falls, and is well known here.

John E. Havel, the sage of Rollis, offers up the following advice to the powers that be: "A great number of deer have been killed by wolves this winter. The wolf bounty should be raised above the price of deer. People would turn their attention to wolves, and deer would not be hunted, even during the open season. By the time the wolves were practically exterminated, deer would again be plentiful. This would do more for the preserving of game than the present high fines and low bounties."

State Dairy and Food Commissioner McConnell is in favor of multiplying the creameries in this state, as he recognizes the great value of the butter and cheese industry, but very properly warns the farmers against the smooth tongued creamery promoters, who go through the country offering to build creameries more cheaply than can the farmers. He says that farmers are continually taken in by these adventurers, and sometimes pay them twice as much money as would be required under efficient local management. This is a warning that should be heeded by the localities around here contemplating building creameries. In the matter of creameries, Commissioner McConnell has issued a circular giving full information for their establishment, from which accurate estimates can be made of the cost, and from which rules for the most effective and economical operation can be gleaned. With this chart before them the farmers will not need the services of the peripatetic promoters.

Leo Kuklinski wants it distinctly understood that the uniform which so adds to the personal beauty of the preserver of the peace and dignity of Thief River Falls is the personal property of the person who wears it, and does not belong to the city. He admits that the city at one time had an opportunity of owning it, but that time is now past.

I wish to announce to the public that I will soon (date to be announced latter) start a milk route in this city. Milk will be delivered each morning during cold weather, and both morning and evening in the summer time. My farm is one-half mile west of the city, and I will do a straight and honest business. H. E. Gusa.

Mrs. Joseph Panek called at the News office this week to have a correction made of error which appeared in the Red Lake county financial statement published in this paper recently. It stated that she had received aid from the county to the amount of $10.55, when as a matter of fact it was Mrs. Kasmer Panek that received the aid.

The special meeting of the city council Tuesday night transacted business left over from the regular meeting, the proceedings of which appear in another column. M. Olson was elected city engineer and night watchman. Lars Backe was appointed purchasing agent for all departments in the city, and a petition was presented from John Morgan and others asking the council not to issue more than 11 licenses to sell liquor during the next year.

Chief Kuklinski made two women happy Monday afternoon and two men correspondingly mad. They came to this city from the Clearwater country and while the women were making purchases, the men proceeded to get drunk. When it was time to go home, the wives appealed to Chief Kuklinski. He went into a local saloon after them, and by using force succeeded in landing them in their respective sleighs.

W. C. Smiley was down to Red Lake Falls last week. He has completed the survey of Rocksbury ditch No. 1, and has filed his report with the county auditor. The total estimated cost of the ditch is $1,011.92. It will drain the famous Conelly slough and other wet lands just south of Thief River Falls, which have long been in need of such improvement. No action was taken by the county commissioners in regard to establishing this ditch at their meeting held the first of the week. There is a difference of opinion as to the direction in which it should run.

VOL. XIX. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1902. NUMBER 8

A PIONEER.

Was Carl Kretzschmar Who Died Saturday.

Carl Kretzschmar, the pioneer and father of Thief River Falls, died last Saturday morning after a long illness. Death was not unexpected, as the doctors long ago had said he could not recover, but friends continued to hope for the best.

No man in Thief River Falls was held in more universal esteem and his death is a severe blow to the city. No man was more public spirited, had better judgment, or would do for the community in which he resided than the deceased. He was of sturdy German stock, had a strong sense of right and wrong, and was true and devoted to his friends.

Few men have met with more reverses than had Mr. Kretzschmar, yet he never lost heart, and in the end conquered. Born in Germany Feb. 25, 1842, he commenced business in the city Berlin where he conducted a large restaurant, and made a comfortable fortune, but met with business reverses and came to this country, settling on a claim near Elizabeth Otter Tail county, Minn., where for a number of years he worked hard and succeeded in making a little money. The first year the Great Northern was built to Crookston he removed to that city and opened up a general merchandise store, where by fair and honest dealing he built up a large business and amassed a small sized fortune. In the spring of 1882 he sold this business and removed to Red Lake Falls where he built a large flour mill and made other improvements. He was unfortunate in that he engaged in business with men of a dishonest nature, and was robbed of about all he had. In 1888 he came to Thief River Falls where he has since resided. Here he built the dam, constructed the flour mill, and platted the original townsite of Thief River Falls, where he has since prospered. Twice had he been elected to the highest office within the gift of the people here—once president of the village council once mayor.

The funeral services were held Monday afternoon, the Rev. Lutteman making a short address and prayer over the remains at the house, after which the Masonic lodge, of which the deceased was a sincere and devoted member, took charge of the remains. The body was taken to Greenwood cemetery, where under the direction of Worshipful Master Tom Morris of Crookston, a short service was held.

The funeral was the largest attended ever held in Thief River Falls, and besides the Masonic lodge, the Thief River Falls Fire Department attended in a body. All of the business houses in the city were closed, and nearly everyone turned out to pay their last respects to the man who can truely be called the father of Thief River Falls.

Among those from outside the city who attended the funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. Adam Zeh, Mesdames H. J. Kaufer, P. A. Kaufer, J. A. Duffy, Messrs. Ernest Buse and August Claus, of Red Lake Falls; Tom Morris, Rev. H. M. Green M. R. Brown, W. G. Lytle, Jas. E. Morrisey and Joseph Smith, of Crookston; Geo. Osmann and W. H. Butler, of St. Paul; Leo Baer and Dr. Jaehning of Fertile; A. C. Clausen, of Minneapolis; and John Hoerning, father of Mrs. Kretzschmar, of Oshkosh, Wis.

Notice to Milk Buyers.

I wish to announce to the public that I will soon (date to be announced latter) start a milk route in this city. Milk will be delivered each morning during cold weather, and both morning and evening in the summer time. My farm is one-half mile west of the city, and I will do a straight and honest business. H. E. Gusa.

MAYOR AND MAJOR

Kratka and McLaughlin Arrived Yesterday.

Mayor Frank H. Kratka, accompanied by Maj. James McLaughlin who will make the treaty with the Red Lake band of Indians, arrived in the city yesterday from Washington.

When seen by a representative of the News Maj. McLaughlin said that the treaty will be made with the Indians. He stated that during the past few years he had made—with one exception—every treaty that had been made with the Indians, and that he had never yet failed. He always recognizes the rights of the Indians and makes a plain statement of facts to them in every instance, and all agreements are carried out. He does not anticipate that he will have much trouble in making the treaty, and will do all that honorably can be done for us.

Mayor Kratka received many compliments upon the success of his Washington trip, all of which are deserved. He is ninteen pounds lighter than when leaving this city a few weeks ago, and accounts for the loss of flesh by the long walks which he took each day between the different departments in Washington in endeavoring to to have our desires accomplished.

Maj. McLaughlin accompanied by Mayor Kratka, C. C. Jackson Matt Barzen and others left this morning for the Agency.

FOR A PIANO.

For the New High School Building.

Prof. Wilson has made arrangements for a series of four high class entertainments to be given in the near future, the proceeds to be used for the purchase of a piano for the city high school. The first of these will be a concert on March 7, by the Slayton Jubilee Singers, perhaps the finest aggregation of colored artists in the country. Concerning their recent appearance in Winnipeg, the Telegram of that city says:

"The Slayton Jubilee singers made their first appearance in this city last evening in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium. Their debut was very successful, as they not only gave their entertainment to a large audience, but their efforts received unstinted, and on several occasions, enthusiastic applause. The company is a most capable one, possessing not only excellent soloists, but one of the finest male quartets ever heard in this city."

The second number of the course will occur March 22 and will be a lecture on the customs, manners and home of the Esquimaux by Miss Clof Krarer, a native Esquimaux. The lecture is said to be brilliant and very interesting throughout. Miss Krarer's costumes and the fact that she is only 40 inches high are features of especial interest.

The third number of the course comes April 11 and will be a grand concert by the Ptricolo Concert Company. This is undoubtedly the finest thing in the course, as the members of the company are all artists of the first grade.

The fourth will be a play to be given by home talent, and will be given about a week after the third series. The admission for the first three will be $1.00.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The House Will Reach a Vote on the New Tax Code Monday.

St. Paul, Feb. 21.—The house expects to reach a vote on the new tax code, as amended, Monday.

The house adopted without serious objection the provisions of the new tax code relative to the taxation of realty. It assembles all the good provisions of the many old laws in concise form, and adds some new ones.

The house also relieved the vesselmen of Duluth and other international waters from local taxation, retaining the present vessel tonnage tax and had passed an amendment relieving bankers from the obligation to list for taxation the moneys of their depositors.

The recess found it struggling with the problem of the inquisitorial features of the personal property assessment.

Car' Wallace of Hennepin offered an amendment to strike out the section so popularly classified, and to insert the present law as to personal property taxation in the code.

Mr. Jacobson of Lac qui Parle saddled the Wallace amendment with a rider penalizing tax dodgers, and providing for the summoning of suspects before the assessing authorities.

After speeches by Peterson and Sageng, both the amendment and rider were adopted.

In the Senate.

The tax code was advanced from the tax committee to general orders in the senate yesterday.

The proposed amendment to the rules which limit the legislation which the senate may take up, received a probable death blow when Senator J. D. Jones moved all such amendments be referred to the committee on rules. The motion prevailed without a dissenting vote.

Senator Knatvold called for action on the only bill appropriating $25,000 for the expenses of the state in the suit against the railroad merger. The bill on its final passage secured 41 votes. There were no noes.

RUSTLERS MAY WIN.

Indicted at Special Term of Court—Indictment Void.

Pierre, S. D., Feb. 22.—G. P. Horben, an attorney from Platte, secured a writ of habeas corpus from the supreme court in the case of Olaf Nelson, one of the parties charged with cattle rustling in Lyman county. The grounds for asking for the writ is that the indictment was found at a special term of court, which is claimed to be in violation of constitutional provisions. The argument on the habeas corpus will be before the supreme court some time early next month, and is a case of immense importance for the reason that it will knock out all the indictments returned in the numerous rustling cases in that county if the position taken in this case is sustained.

CLOTHING STOLEN.

Albert Lea Merchant's Stock Is Suddenly Reduced.

Albert Lea, Minn., Feb. 22. — While the light was burning in the clothing store of W. W. Johnson & Co. last night a burglar knocked out a rear window and made away with a lot of goods, estimated to be worth $150. Yesterday a man who has been out of a state penal institution but a short time for stealing wheat from a farmer was in the store and selected some goods and had them laid away, but paid no money on them. Last night they were taken, together with a fur coat, a lot of silk handkerchiefs and jewelry, besides other goods. The man has not been located yet, but it is expected he will be before long, as the officers are on the lookout.

LEVEL PLAN RETAINED.

A. O. U. W. Grand Lodge Turns Down Graded System by One Vote.

St. Paul, Feb. 22. — By a margin of just one vote, and after the matter had been debated for hours, the grand lodge of Minnesota, Ancient Order of United Workmen, yesterday decided to retail the old or level plan of assessment. The vote on adopting that provision of the new constitution which provided for the classified plan of assessment, resulted in 163 for the classified plan and 164 against it. There were 377 accredited delegates to the grand lodge, and a few in the hall did not vote, and others were absent. The entire day was devoted to a discussion of the question.

WOMEN IN A RAID.

Swoop Down on Gambling House and Capture Roulette Table, Etc.

Sisseton, S. D., Feb. 22.—The W. C. T. U. ladies of this place raided a gambling house conducted by Ole Midboe. They captured a roulette table and other gamblers' stock in trade. One of the women tried the slot machine during the raid, it is reported, and won 10 cents. The city government is in control of officers and aldermen in favor of a "wide open policy," and it looks now as if those in favor of better regulations and enforcement of the liquor and gambling laws are determined to compel the city officials to make some effort to enforce the city ordinances.

Rich Shipment of Silver Ore.

Helena, Mont., Feb. 22.—The United States Smelting and Refining company's smelter at East Helena has received a shipment of silver ore which is believed to be the richest ever made in the state. OPERATOR ON THE HOHENZOLLERN SENDS MESSAGES BY WIRELESS SYSTEM.

New York, Feb. 23.—All preparations have been made for the reception and entertainment of Prince Henry of Prussia, who is on the Kron Prinz Wilhelm, which is expected to arrive today.

The imperial yacht Hohenzollern, after having been cleaned up and partly repainted, lies at her pier at the foot of West Thirty-fourth street, awaiting the prince's arrival.

The Marconi apparatus on the Hohenzollern has been tested and found to be in good working order. Last night the operator on board began to send messages in the effort to locate the prince's ship. On board the Cunarder Etruria the wireless apparatus is also in readiness, and an operator on watch for signals from the Kron Prinz Wilhelm.

Admiral Evans, Gen. Corbin and Assistant Secretary Hill, the president's delegates, the board the Kron Prinz Wilhelm, probably at the quarantine station, and will greet Prince Henry in the name of the United States government.

All arrangements have been completed for the dinner to be given to the American press in honor of Prince Henry on Tuesday next, and Herman Ridder, who has charge of the preparations for this banquet, said that the number of acceptances received from leading representatives of the newspaper world was gratifying.

The Irving Place theater, where a gala performance is to be given this evening, has been beautifully decorated and orders have been given for the festooning of the prince's box with American beauty roses. More than 400 roses will be uses for this purpose. Heinrich Conried, manager of the theater, has had a special entrance broken through the wall on the Fifteenth street side of the theater, in order to permit the prince to enter the royal box immediately on stepping from his carriage.

SERIOUS FOR ANDREWS.

Arraigned on Charge of Making False Bank Reports.

Detroit, Feb. 23. — A third warrant was issued yesterday for Frank C. Andrews, vice president of the City Savings bank, which is in the hands of a receiver, on a complaint charging him and another officer of the bank, for whom a warrant was also issued, with making a false report on the bank's condition to the state banking commissioner on Feb. 20, 1901. Mr. Andrews was arraigned in the police court late yesterday afternoon. His counsel asked that he be released on this charge on his personal recognizance in view of the fact that the bail on the two former complaints against him totals $25,000, and is ample. Judge Whelan declined to grant the request and fixed the bail at $50,000. This was not furnished. Mr. Andrews' examination was set for Feb. 28, the date of his examination on the other complaints.

COSTS PRETTY PENNY.

Woman Head of a Religious Sect Gets Verdict of $1,500.

Omaha, Feb. 23. — Mrs. Sarah Figg, who sued John B. Hanger, Woodson Browning and Bert Donahoo for $2,000 damages for alleged malicious persecution in having Mrs. Figg taken before the insanity commission, yesterday secured a verdict of $1,500. Mrs. Figg is the head of a religious sect of Gretna, Neb., which the defendants claimed was responsible for their wives leaving them. Mrs. Figg, they alleged, had secured an influence over many of the women of Gretna which had destroyed the domestic peace of their families, and asked the insanity commission to examine into Mrs. Figg's sanity. The damage suit and yesterday's verdict are the result.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

House Makes Good Progress on the Tax Code.

St. Paul, Feb. 22.—Over fifty amendments to the tax code had been disposed of yesterday when the house adjourned until Monday noon.

Among the principal subjects was the request of the Duluth delegation, through George R. Laybourn, for an amendment exempting from taxation grain in store in elevators awaiting shipment. This was beaten.

Fred Sander of Henderson wanted the salary of the tax commissioners cut to $2,400, but the amendment was not adopted, and the salary stands at $3,000.

J. H. Johnson of Minneapolis offered four amendments, saving one from the wreck, which insists on two or more sureties for township assessors.

The only waiting amendment published is that of Mr. Plowman of Otter Tail, providing for a state board of equalization consisting of the governor, auditor, attorney general and one member from each congressional district, appointed by the governor, instead of the tax commission provided by the code.

A number of amendments are awaiting action, which have been sent to the speaker's desk, but which are not yet the property of the house.

The house unanimously adopted a resolution indorsing the bill of Senator Hoar to limit the use of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases. Minneapolis labor unions asked it.

In the Senate.

Senator J. D. Jones revived the Bobleter appropriation, which was supposed to have been killed, by moving that a committee of five be appointed to hear complaints against allowing the former state treasurer $3,000. The motion prevailed.

The bill appropriating $11,500 for the public examiner's department was also passed.

Among measures presented was one by Senator Sivright for a constitutional amendment to permit the placing of a tonnage tax on mines.

BETTERING YELLOWSTONE.

Uncle Sam Is Expending a Great Deal of Money.

Livingston, Mont., Feb. 23. — Many thousand dollars are being spent by the United States government in the Yellowstone National Park. Roads are being improved and heretofore inaccessible places, high in Wonderland, are being placed within reach of the tourist. A roadway is in course of construction to the lower portions of the grand canyon, high bridges being necessary to span the deep chasms. It is the intention to spend $500,000, and it is possible that the congressional appropriation may exceed that amount. Two more hotels will be constructed by the Yellowstone Park Transportation company. According to the officials of the company, a record-breaking travel is predicted for this season, hundreds of tourists already having engaged transportation.

BURGLARS BLOW OFF SAFE DOOR.

Break Into a Seventh Street Saloon and Get $930.

St. Paul, Feb. 23.—An iron safe in the saloon of Ed Reese, Seventh and Neill streets, was blown open early yesterday morning and $900 was stolen. About $30 was also taken from the cash register. The back door of the saloon, the lock of which had been broken, was found wide open at 6:30 o'clock yesterday morning by W. Reese, father of the proprietor of the saloon. Mr. Reese says that he found three whisky glasses, with three others used for the "wash," a bottle of whisky and a box of cigars on the counter near the safe. The trio had evidently enjoyed a few drinks after they had finished the job.

MASONIC TEMPLE IS CLEAR.

No Lien or Debt on Fargo's $70,000 Building.

Fargo, N. D., Feb. 23.—The trustees of the Masonic Temple are about the most contented men in Fargo over the success in practically completing their magnificent structure without a dollar's lien of any kind against the building. The money is in sight for the $70,000 temple. The trustees had a fund to start with and set aside 600 bonds, of which 500 have been sold. The others will probably be held back. Every bond was sold at par and the purchasers can secure life membership by detaching the coupons, their dues being paid as long as they live, making them a very desirable possession.

HAMMON SENTENCED.

He Is Given Three Years and Six Months.

Parker, S. D., Feb. 23.—Harry Hammon was sentenced by Judge Smith to three years and six months in the state penitentiary. The crime for which Hammon was convicted was the murder of Fred Mauman on the 23d of last April. The jury rendered a verdict of manslaughter in the second degree.

Matt Hunter Sentenced.

Des Moines, Iowa, Feb. 23. — Matt Hunter was given a life sentence by Judge Parish at Mount Ayr for the murder of Homer Holland Nov. 9. CAUSES BIG STIR

ATTORNEY GENERAL KNOX'S DECISION TO FIGHT THE MERGER.

WALL STREET IS AGITATED

ALL OTHER CONSIDERATIONS IN THE STOCK MARKET OVERSHADOWED.

STOCKS FALL AWAY SHARPLY

NORTHERN SECURITIES TAKES A DROP OF OVER THREE POINTS.

New York, Feb. 22.—The announcement by the attorney general of the United States that he believed the Northern Securities company infringed the anti-trust law and that he would file a bill in equity in the supreme court, in accordance with instructions from the president, to test the question, overshadowed all other considerations in the stock market yesterday. The acute interest manifested in this company by all speculators, and, indeed, all holders of securities, was vividly demonstrated by the effect in the stock market and was the more notable since Great Northern preferred is the only stock remaining listed on the exchange which is directly included in the securities company. Yet the whole market fell away sharply under heavy liquidation, with only a few unimportant exceptions. The stocks of the trans-continental companies were naturally most affected, as the formation of the Northern Securities company represented an effort to harmonize conflicting interests in that field. Great Northern preferred lost 6 1-4, Northwestern 7 3-4, Rock Island 5 1-8, St. Paul 3 5-8, Union Pacific 3 1-4 and Southern Pacific 2 7-8. Elsewhere in the list losses generally ran from 1 to 3 points, and considerably over that in many exceptional cases. On the curb Northern Securities when issued Dropped Over Three Points.

The direct concern of such a variously assorted lot of securities in the welfare of the Northern Securities company is not very obvious, but the average speculator in stocks, especially the professional trader, is deeply imbued with the conviction that all his woes are the outgrowth of the conflict for Northern Pacific control last year and that it is only necessary for the readjustment to be made of the situation precipitated at that time for the stock market to resume all the buoyancy and speculative furore that was interrupted by the May panic. For some time there has been a deep-rooted conviction among the speculators that the supreme court would throw out of court Minnesota's suit against the legality of the Northern Securities company. There has been an assumption also, which was carefully fostered in the interest of a revival of speculation, that the public opposition to financial combinations was more apparent than real, and that a demonstration of the public utility of these combinations would secure them against interference even where technically open to construction of illegality. Yesterday morning's announcement from Washington was, therefore, a rude shock to all of these optimistic sentiments that has been carefully nurtured in the financial district.

LONG MAY STEP OUT.

Now That the Schley Matter Is Settled He May Resign.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Now that the Schley matter has been settled officially it is understood that Secretary Long feels he is at liberty to carry out the project cherished by him in the last year of President McKinley's administration to retire to private life. However, this is not expected to ensue at once, for there is no certain knowledge of what may follow in congress notwithstanding a strong belief by the administration that the case is settled beyond revival. Therefore, it is understood that the change in the cabinet will not take place before the adjournment of the present session of congress, and, perhaps, not until next autumn.

ASSESS ON STOCK VALUES.

Bill in Iowa Legislature to Tax Railroads.

Des Moines, Iowa, Feb. 22.—A senate committee has prepared a bill providing for the assessment of railroad property in Iowa on a basis of the market value of stocks and bonds. The proposed law gives the executive council sufficient discretion to bring it within the constitution, but it requires the council to determine the value of the railroads in the market in the ordinary course of trade, which is taken to mean the value of their stocks and bonds.

Latest Thing in Social Way.

Fargo, N. D., Feb. 22. — Since the smallpox epidemic and the general vaccination orders by the state board of health, there is a new form of amusement in many towns, called vaccination parties. All freshly punctured persons get together and forget their troubles in a general good time and bid defiance to smallpox.

Turkey's Way of Paying.

Constantinople, Feb. 22. — The Turkish government's methods of saving appearances have again been exemplified by the payment of indemnities due to British subjects, under guise of improving the navy. Out of $108,000 just paid the Armstrongs on account of a contract for a new cruiser, $64,000 was handed over to the officials of the British empire to pay indemnities.

Knox Will Not Resign.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Reports having been rather widely circulated that Attorney General Knox had decided to resign from the cabinet, it can be stated that there is absolutely no basis of fact for these reports.

Heavy Loss by Fire.

New York, Feb. 22.—The repair shop, machine shop and other buildings of the Fifth avenue branch of the Brooklyn elevated railroad were destroyed by fire last night. Loss, $250,000. Three firemen were injured.

GEOGRAPHICAL DIVISIONS OF CURRENCY

On the occasion of the great live stock show in Chicago it was remarked all over the city how cattlemen from the west had flooded hotels, restaurants, stores, and even saloons with silver dollars. Such a landslide of silver had not been experienced in years, and banks especially remarked the influx.

The circumstance was illustrative of something which may be termed fashions in money, as applied to the provincial sections of the United States. For current money in New York may not be at all popular in San Francisco, and the Chicago one-cent piece, which does universal duty everywhere, finds its occupation gone west of Omaha and Kansas City and south of the Missouri river. But the recognition or non-recognition of the penny is something wholly apart from the fashions in money.

In the recent flooding of Chicago with silver dollars it was recognized to be the incoming of western men who did it. West of the Mississippi river, on into the great areas of silver and gold ores, the silver dollar is almost universal, and as one goes on toward the Pacific from the east line of Colorado the gold pieces in $5, $10, and $20 denominations become more in use. When California is reached a man runs a chance of hunger if he has a pocketbook full of $20 bills, and as for $1 and $2 bills, a Pacific coast goat would not eat them.

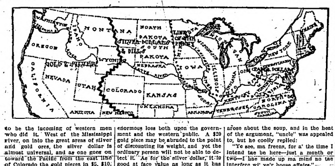
There are many freakish circumstances connected with the country's media of exchange. One of these novel situations in a western city arose when the local gas company put in meters of drop-a-quarter-in-the-slot pattern. Flats, apartment buildings, small business concerns and the poorer residences were equipped with these meters, making it necessary to drop a quarter inside to start a light. When the quarter's worth of gas was used another quarter had to be dropped in to replenish the flow.

The result was that the whole city was stripped of 25-cent pieces for ordinary circulation. Persons having slot meters saved the coins in order to have them ready; the meters held them for a month, of course, and then when the company, deposited the silver in the bank the bank was swamped with a legal tender coin that had only a limited legal tender application.

In some sections of country where there is a prejudice against national banks many individuals go so far as to refuse national bank notes at the windows of the paying tellers especially. The national bank note is not a legal tender and cannot be forced upon a creditor in liquidation of indebtedness.

As to a comparison between gold, silver, and paper as media of exchange, gold is the least adapted for the purpose. The wear upon it is an enormous loss both upon the government and the western public. A $20 gold piece may be abraded to the point of discounting its weight, and yet the ordinary person will not be able to detect it. As for the silver dollar, it is good at face value as long as it has mark enough to distinguish its coinage, provided it has not been mutilated willfully. Even the ashes of a greenback or silver certificate may be redeemed at the face value of the note under proper conditions of proof.

Of all bills used by the government the $2 bill has been least popular. It lends itself to trickery in at least two ways not common to other bills. It has been estimated that if 1,000 $2 bills be presented in 1,000 saloons as they run, the customer will be "short-changed" in 700 cases, the bartender accepting them as $1 bills. Again, the $2 bill should not be especially a favorite with the government for the reason that it is "raised" more often than any other bill.



DID NOT INTERFERE.

Scotchman Too Shrewed to Be Caught in Such a Simple Trap.

An old Scotchman went to visit a young couple, says the Pittsburg Press. After two or three weeks had passed the young folks began to get tired of their visitor, but did not like to tell him the state of their feelings toward him, so they arranged a little plan between them as to how they would get rid of him.

"To-morrow," said the husband, "when I come home for dinner, I shall quarrel about the soup and say it is not good. In the midst of our quarrel we will appeal to our friend, and if he takes your part I will give him notice to leave the house, and if he takes my part you do the same."

Next day at dinner as the "quarrel" arose about the soup, and in the heat of the argument, "uncle" was appealed to, but he coolly replied:

"Ye see, ma freens, for a' the time I intend tae be here—just a month or two—I hae made up ma mind no tae interfere wi' yo'r hoose affairs."

BANKS OF MANY LANDS.

Money Boxes Seem to Be an Institution All Over the World.

London Queen illustrates a collection of earthenware money boxes. The illustration shows a group of eight, of which the earliest as to date is also the most ingenious. This is the head of a man in Fulham or Lambeth ware, the mouth being adapted to form the slit through which to drop the coins. The Jolly Brewer's head is the well-known brown glazed Rockingham ware, and the slit is made in the back of the head. The chest of drawers is also Rockingham, the slit being in the top.

With a frugal nation like the French the existence of the money box creates no surprise. In the South it is met with in great variety of shape, animals and fruits being the popular forms.

The Dutch, too, have their money boxes, and one in possession of the collector is rudely shaped in the form of a pig, special attention being paid to the curl of the tail. It measures 15 inches in length, and cut into the material is the inscription, in old Dutch: "Dat gij mij geven wil; het is goet, ik sta hier stil," which, freely rendered into English, implies, "Here I am; give whatever you please."

Crossing to Africa, we meet with money boxes among the northern tribes.

The largest of all is from Java, made in common brown native ware, without decoration.

MADRID'S HIGH DEATH RATE.

Distinction of Being the Most Unhealthy Capital in Europe.

Madrid enjoys the unenviable distinction of being in every way the most unhealthy capital in Europe. According to statistics just published by the municipality, there have been 79,374 deaths during the past five years, among a population of only slightly exceeding 500,000.

In 1901 the death numbered 17,242, and of these 4,064 were of children under four years of age. This gives a rate of about 33 per 1,000. In the five years' period consumption carried off nearly 10,000 inhabitants, and smallpox and measles 5,000 more.

The municipality is just beginning to realize the bearing of these figures, and various decrees have been published for the better enforcement of sanitation. Among other things it is to be a punishable offense to let an apartment or dwelling before it has been disinfected by the municipal laboratory department. But two of the greatest evils in Madrid are food adulteration, which is virtually unchecked and overcrowding. The 528,000 inhabitants are herded in 17,000 houses, which gives an average of thirty-one persons per house.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Merovingian Cemetery.

At Briadels, near Saint-Affrique, in the south of France, a recent storm laid bare an immense cemetery of the Merovingian period. The tombs are formed of slabs, arranged in many ways, some with flat tops on vertical sides and others arranged like sheds.

EXPENSIVE POSITIONS.

Those Held by the Members of the President's Cabinet.

A member of the Cabinet to entertain largely should have such a house as usually rents at from $6,000 to $12,000 a year. Senator Depew pays $1,000 a month for his house. On the other side, Secretary Wilson, who is a comparatively poor man, lives in a house that rents for not more than $75 a month. Postmaster General Smith spent his entire salary of $8,000 a year, and was compelled to write magazine articles and to add to his income in other ways to maintain his establishment. He finally wearied of the struggle and took apartments at a hotel.

Each Cabinet minister is expected once a year to entertain the President and his associates at dinner. Beyond this he can cut out dinner-giving. The secretary of state, in addition, must give a breakfast once a year to the diplomatic corps. Secretary Day resigned because he could not afford to follow the social pace.

Carriages and horses are furnished by the government to Cabinet members. All other expenses they must pay themselves. A member of the Cabinet maintaining his own house would have to expend at least $16,000 a year, or nearly double his salary, to keep up even ordinary appearances.

Attorney General Knox, upon taking up his residence in Washington, began by purchasing a house costing $140,000 and bringing with him a team of horses that cost $12,000. His expenses will be vastly in excess of $15,000 a year.

James S. Clarkson, when he became first assistant postmaster general, rented a house at $3,800 a year. His salary was $4,000. Mr. Clarkson laughingly said to his wife: "What shall we do with the remainder of my salary?"

"Rent a telephone," was the reply.

Not Quite What She Meant.

The pitfalls which the English language offers to the foreigner are many. A French woman who has undertaken housekeeping in New York thought she had a good working knowledge of the language, says Short Stories, but she soon discovered her mistake.

One day this summer she called a carpenter and planned with him to have some work done about the house in the way of putting up shelves, easing some doors and improving the place in other small ways. She went over the ground with him as carefully as possible to get from him an estimate of what the work would cost.

After it was done the bill submitted was considerably in excess of the sum first named. The woman endeavored to remonstrate, but succeeded only in putting her French thought into the following English: "But you are more dear to me than when we were first engaged."

SCHLEY'S LOVING CUP

When Admiral Schley visited Knoxville he was presented with a handsome gold and silver loving cup, as a token of the esteem in which he is held by the people of Knoxville. The cup was presented at a banquet given the Admiral by the Knoxville Chamber of Commerce. J. W. Caldwell presided as toastmaster, and at the conclusion of the toasts introduced W. B. Lockett, president of the Chamber of Commerce, who presented the cup, which is of solid silver, with the bowl lined with gold. It is twelve inches in height and seven inches in diameter across the top. The bowl is nine and one-half inches deep, and the pedestal is two and a half inches high. Its capacity is six pints. The cup has three handles, all of which, together with the base, are elaborately chased. The inscription on the cup reads:

ADMIRAL WINFIELD SCOTT SCHLEY,

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND CITIZENS OF KNOXVILLE, TENN.

WOOL FROM ICELAND.

Finest and Strongest Possible and Is Carded and Spun By Women.

Even in far-away Iceland feminine enterprise and industry are working wonders. A woman of that country, who has the welfare of her fellow women very much at heart, has been working to better their condition, and to that end has secured assistance and built a small institution at Upermavik, where girls may receive the rudiments of an education. This is something which was denied their mothers, whose education was limited to domestic science. For the supporting of this school its founder set about to introduce Iceland woolens into England and later into America.

She secured an interview with Queen Victoria and interested the sovereign of Great Britain in her humble, but noble effort for the women of an almost unknown land. The cloth was taken up at once by sportsmen, as it was found to be the best known for shooting wear. Briers do not tear it; it is soft and cool in summer and warm in winter.

The gathering of the wool is peculiar, as it would be fatal to the sheep to shear them in that icy land. The Iceland cloth is made from the wool which is found in the sheds wherein the poor beasts are sheltered from the Arctic weather. This is of the finest possible fiber. It is cleaned, carded and spun by the Iceland women and then woven by hand on their primitive looms.

Rubbing It In on a Publisher.

Henry M. Hyde was sent for a few months ago by a Chicago publisher who wanted to get out a volume of golf stories, says the New York Times. He thought Mr. Hyde was the man to write to order, but he wished to make certain before he committed himself.

Without signing a contract, he persuaded Mr. Hyde to write him a couple of stories and send them to his office by way of getting started. A week later the stories came back with a note which said: "Don't write any more of that rot. Nobody but a fool would print stories like these."

Mr. Hyde sent one of the tales thus rudely rejected to Harper's, and it was printed a month or two later in Harper's Bazar. He then sent a marked copy of the Bazar to the Chicago publisher, with a note which read: "Referring to your last letter: Here's one fool. More to come." A little later the second of the stories was published in the Smart Set, and again a copy went forward, labeled "Fool No. 2." After a third story had been written, published, marked and forwarded, the publisher in question sent an answer to Mr. Hyde by special delivery.

"Let up," it said. "What's the use of rubbing it in. I'm sorry I spoke."

Behind the Scenes.

"Why are authors such reticent men?"

"They have to be, so as not to disclose the fact that most of the wonderful things publishers say about them are fictions."—Washington Star.

Spiritualism Declining.

It has been the general observation that for some years past spiritualism has been in a gradual decline. This is the law with everything that is not founded on true merit. The reason Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has been recognized as the leading family medicine during the past fifty years is because it is founded on true merit, and has always been found reliable in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, constipation and biliousness. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Good Thing, After All.

Mr. Muchblest—Great Scott! This is too much. This makes the seventh time my wife has had twins.

Mr. Hoodoo—That's all right. Look at the advantage of it! By having them come in pairs like that, you've been able to avoid the unlucky number thirteen.—Harlem Life.

Puzzled by His Discovery.

At the table on an incoming liner on a recent trip, one of the first-cabin passengers found in an oyster one of the tiny seed-pearls which look almost exactly like bird-shot. Apparently, the formation of pearls was a mystery to him, for he examined the thing curiously, picked it up gingerly, and laid it on the tablecloth for further investigation. Now, it is a habit of cooks at sea to carry fish hooks in their pockets, and on this trip, by a curious coincidence, part of a small hook got caught in a beefsteak that was served to this particular passenger. As soon as his knife encountered the hard object, he started, picked it out carefully and laid it beside the other find on the cloth. Then he beckoned to the waiter and confidentially whispered in his ear:

"I don't want to be impertinent," he said, "but would you mind telling me why you shoot your oysters and why you catch your steaks with a hook and line?"—New York Evening Post.

Another Man Altogether.

Valley, Mo., Feb. 24th.—There is a man in this town who has undergone the most remarkable physical change in the last few months.

His name is Perry Nelson, and those who knew him but a short time ago are amazed at his present condition.

He had not been feeling well for some time, and suspecting that the trouble came from his kidneys, which he knew were not any too strong, he determined to try a kidney medicine.

Dodd's Kidney Pills were highly recommended, and Mr. Nelson began a treatment of them. He was rewarded by a complete restoration to vigorous good health. He says:

"I used six boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and they have helped me a great deal. I feel like another man, and can recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills very highly."

Foul Air in Rooms.

The following, from a London paper, Science, shows the importance of securing pure air in dwelling apartments, especially in the evening:

"That the amount of oxygen in a room is decreased alarmingly by our methods of illumination, the following simple statements show: A man may exist for an hour in a fair-sized room hermetically sealed, if he has no light he has a lamp instead of a candle, in that room with him, and his existence will be shortened by fifteen minutes. If he has a lamp instead of a candle, in order to make himself more comfortable with additional light, he would live only half an hour. If he had two good gas burners, he would scarcely have time to write his will, for he would not live more than five minutes."

A WESTERN CANADA FARMER.

SEVEN YEARS AGO HE HAD BUT $24; NOW HE HAS SEVENTY HEAD OF CATTLE.

This Is What a Couple of Eastern Farmers Learned When on a Recent Trip to Canada—Splendid Words About Saskatoon, Rosthern and Hague District Where They Will Locate.

Messrs. J. E. Blum and J. Crumpet of Manchester, Washtenaw County, Michigan, paid a visit to Alberta last summer and saw there a Mr. Shantz, one of the good old Pennsylvania stock, who had come recently—some seven years ago—from Ontario with $24 in his pocket. He has certainly prospered, as he now has over seventy head of cattle, has a good loghouse framed over; also a good barn, and in all respects looks a thrifty and well-to-do farmer. He had some good crops of oats and barley. After spending some days in Calgary and Edmonton they returned to Regina, Assiniboia, and looked around the country north to Lumsden and Balgonie, where the crops appeared very promising and heavy; continuing up the Regina and Long Lake road they came to Saskatoon on the crossing of the South Saskatchewan River. Of this district they say:

"The country here pleased us better than any we have seen. We drove out eighteen miles in a northwesterly direction through the Smith settlement. This is a wonderful district; the growth was splendid; all kinds of grains and roots were perfection. The older settlers had good buildings of all kinds and looked very prosperous; in fact, we came to the conclusion that we had found what we were looking for, a good country. While the nature of the soil changes and is in some parts light, in others stony, and again heavy, generally speaking it leaves nothing to be desired. Hay and water are also in abundance and wood can be found along the river slopes and islands. We have decided to locate there and shall certainly advise our friends to do likewise. We also trust that this report may have the effect of drawing the attention of land seekers to this district, and can honestly advise all such to locate there. They will find a good thing. As farmers ourselves, from a good district in Michigan, we have come to the conclusion that, properly farmed, western Canada will grow almost anything." MADE LINCOLN SAD

GRAPHIC PICTURE OF A TOUCHING SCENE AT NEW ORLEANS.

Aristocratic Frenchman of the Southern City Could Not Understand the Wave of Pity Which Saddened the Tender Heart of the Great Emancipator.

One of the most touching pictures ever seen by mortal eyes since the three crosses stood out against the darkening sky, must have been that of Abraham Lincoln looking on at the slave auction in New Orleans one day away back, long before he had become a nation's idol, only to find a martyr's grave.

An old weazened Frenchman, with a scornful turn of his aristocratic old profile, told me the story of his attendance at the slave auction that day.

"Why, yes, I remember the fellow well," said the old Frenchman, in answer to my inquiry. I cannot give the story in all its charm, as it came in broken French from beneath the snowy mustache, because I was so thrilled by the picture conjured up by the story that I could give little attention to the accent. "Yes, in those days I always lik' to go down to 'ze levee" (would that I could give you the quaint, delicious accent, half Parisian French, half 'Cajen, wholly N'Orleans), "I meet such strange people down there. In my father's house all say one thing—nothing new at all. An', as I say, when I went to the slave auction that day—lovely, sunshiny day, jus' lik' always come here Mardi Gras time, who should I see standing there but that tall, how you call him? lanky flatboatman I know down on ze levee. My li'le heart jump, I so glad to see him, but he look sad, verra sad as he smile at me an' he reach' down an' took my li'le han' in his, oh! so verra hard one, an' he hol' her so tight I feel frightened. I know not why he look so sad. On what they call 'ze block' was only a yellow gal—Mme. ———'s Suzanne, an' they were selling her. I remember right well she was a fine figure of a girl; I remember that yet," and the famous old roue laughed softly and sweetly under the weight of his ninety summers.

"Yes, I remember zat yet," he chuckled; "It's ze climate of zis N'Orleans, I tink. But I go on an' tell you about zo man. But, no, there not anyt'ing to tell, but he look verra sad. An' he hol' my li'le han' so verra tight, lik' I tol' you, an' I feel frightened li'le while, zen I laf' an' I say, 'She only nigger gal', and he hol' my han' too hard zen, an' he say sof' lik' to hisself, 'She's a woman, my God!' An' I laf' again, li'le fellow lik' me, an' I say, 'I know zat,' but he did not laf, and he turn an' walk away lik' he thinkin' to hisself.

"After zat day I never see him on ze levee nor at all; an' I cannot belive anyt'ing lik' zat mak' me sad, an' Mardi Gras time comin', too, but I did feel sad, li'le bit, because I love to fin' him on ze levee, an' I never forget zat name. The next time I heard it—well, we will not now speak of zat time. There was something strange 'bout him, an'—"

The feeble old voice quivered slightly as he continued, "an' somehow I never could forget ze fellow; it all comes back to me now, an' I see him just as he looked zat day. I cannot forget him, but ——" and the old aristocrat of "la belle France" and the ante-bellum south folded his small, shrivelled hands, "but of course he was only one of ze people, an' we cannot blame him for his views, sir; views which we could never share, sir, never."

And the old Frenchman looked very grave as he sat there in the balmy sunshine of his wide "gallery" thinking, perhaps, of how absurdly serious "ze people" could allow themselves to become about mere trifles. "Foolish, sir, perfeckly foolish."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

SEARCH FOR HISTORIC ARMS.

Illinois Men Will Try to Recover Valuable Relics at Fort Charters.

With the object of recovering a lot of brass cannon, old muskets and ammunition said to be buried in the ruins of old Fort Chartres, ten miles west of Red Bud, Ill., and near the banks of the Mississippi, a company is being organized in that town. These arms and their necessary ammunition have lain in their hiding place 137 years, or since 1765. As weapons of war they are, of course, worthless, but as relics they will bring a large sum if recovered. There are said to be sixteen brass cannons in the lot.

The story of the burial of these arms and ammunition has to do with the early struggles between the French and English for the possession of the Mississippi territory. Fort Chartres was one of the French strongholds, and had a large garrison. It surrendered to a much weaker force of the English in 1765 without having fired a shot, the French commander believing that a large army had invested the place. Before surrendering, however, he tumbled the cannon and other arms down a well inside the fort and then had the well filled in. As there were three other wells inside the fort the English never suspected the trick that had been played on them, although they were much surprised not to find the fort richer in arms of defense.

The fort is now a ruin, but its outlines are well defined. One of the members of the company that is going to recover the arms recently found in a lot of old papers and manuscripts a complete plan of the fort made in the days of the French occupation. In this the location of the wells is clearly set out, and with this to guide them the searchers anticipate no difficulty in recovering the weapons.

HOCH DER PRINCE

KAISER'S BROTHER IS MOST CORDIALLY WELCOMED AT NEW YORK.

ARRIVES JUST ONE DAY LATE

ADMIRAL EVANS EXTENDS NATIONS GREETING TO ROYAL GUEST.

CANNON BOOM, WHISTLES SHRIEK

IMMENSE CROWDS SHOUT WELCOME TO GERMANY'S SAILOR PRINCE.

New York, Feb. 25.—Prince Henry of Prussia, representative of his brother, the emperor of Germany, at the launching of the latter's American-built yacht, reached New York yesterday and was cordially welcomed as the guest of the nation. The land batteries that guard the outer harbor sounded the first greeting in a ponderous salute of twenty-one guns, the rifles of a special naval squadron assembled in his honor reechoed the sentiment; there were verbal greetings from the representatives of President Roosevelt, the army, the navy, and the city of New York, and a great crowd lined the way into the city to see and cheer the sailor prince of Germany.

The great storm against which the Kron Prinz Wilhelm had struggled for days, and which had glazed the Atlantic coast in an armor of ice, had lost its force and resigned its sway to warm sunshine and cheery blue skies so that there were no regrets that the royal guest was a full day late for the entertainment prepared for him. The genius of Marconi, reaching out from the storm-swept coast, had definitely located the belated liner and made certain the hour that she would reach Sandy Hook. There was a curtain off the Hook early yesterday morning and it was after 9 o'clock before the watchers caught the shadowy outlines of the cautiously approaching liner.

Evans Shows Up.

Rear Admiral Evans, commander of the special squadron and honorary aide to the prince, left the flagship Illinois at 9:40 o'clock in the naval tug Nina. With him were Capt. G. A. Converse, his chief of staff; Flag Lieut. Frederick Chapin, Ensign Frank T. Evans, aide, and Capt. von Rebeur Paschwitz, naval attache at the Washington embassy of the German government. They were all in full dress uniform. The Nina met the Kron Prinz beyond Fort Wadsworth and swung around to the starboard side of the liner, steaming up the bay. Prince Henry, attired in the uniform of an admiral of the German navy and surrounded by his naval and military staff in brilliant uniform, stood on the bridge of the liner. As the naval tug drew nearer the side of the steamship Prince Henry and Admiral Evans caught sight of each other and exchanged informal salutes. The distance from the steamer to the tug was too far for conversation, however. As the two vessels with a flotilla of tugs and official craft moved in past Fort Wadsworth the first of the salutes of twenty-one guns was fired. As the first gun sounded the prince advanced to the end of the bridge of the Kron Prinz Wilhelm and stood at attention. As he passed, the big American flag floating over the fortifications he and the members of his suite did likewise. The flag at the jackstaff of the Kron Prinz was dipped and the German naval band accompanying the prince played "The Star-Spangled Banner." The guns of Fort Wadsworth were not silent before those across the Narrows at Fort Hamilton boomed out their salute. When that ceremony was over the Kron Prinz was stopped and the Nina hauled around to her port side and Admiral Evans and his staff boarded. The passengers were gathered on the main deck and there was a hearty cheer as the admiral came up the gangway.

Admiral Evans was escorted forward at once and in the quarters of Capt. A. Rienter, master of the Kron Prinz Wilhelm, he and the prince met. The prince came forward and, taking the hand of the naval officer, shook it warmly.

"I am very glad to see you, sir," said the admiral. "Everybody in the United States is waiting to welcome you. It is my pleasure, sir, to formally greet you on their behalf."

"I thank you, sir, and through you, the people of your country," responded the prince. "I am very glad to be here and on this splendid day. The emperor directed me to convey his compliments to you, admiral, and I do so with very great pleasure."

Admiral Evans expressed gratification at the thoughtfulness of the emperor.

Prince Is Saluted.

After a brief halt the liner moved ahead and at 10:50 was abreast of the special squadron off Tompkinsville. The German standard was run to the foretop of the Kron Prinz and its appearance gave signal to the American fleet to salute. The San Francisco, Cincinnati, Olympia and Illinois lay in perfect alignment in the order named and made an attractive picture with their crews manning sides, turrets and tops. They raised the German naval standard and then opened blank fire. The prince stood at attention on the bridge and back of him were Admiral Evans and his staff and the numerous suite of the German visitor. The prince and his staff were especially interested in the Illinois and Olympia, and offered warm congratulations to the American admiral on the splendid appearance of his squadron. The prince said he was very anxious to visit the squadron and that he would do this at the earliest moment.

New York and its surroundings have rarely shown to greater advantage than yesterday in the sunlight, with the added brightness that came from the glistening coating of snow, and the royal visitor did not leave the bridge during the run up the bay. He said that he was at least gratifying an old ambition in visiting New York, and asked that the points of interest be shown him and the geographical bearings explained.

Great Crowds Greet Him.

The first of the large crowds was met at the battery, and from there on up to Recreation Pier, where the largest crowd of all had gathered, every pier to which admission was not denied was partly filled. The number of river craft also increased and the welcome was a noisy one.

Prince Henry disembarked at 12:55 p. m., at that moment walking down the decorated gangway from the Kron Prinz Wilhelm into the elaborately decorated pier. He then passed through an ornamental gangway and arch to the gangplank of the Hohenzollern, which had been decorated in the German colors and was covered half its length. The prince was met at the bottom of the gangplank by Admiral von Baudissin, commander of the Hohenzollern, and his officers.

The first of his callers to arrive after he had boarded the Hohenzollern was Gen. Brooke, U. S. A., accompanied by two aides. Admiral Barker and his aide, Capt. West, representing the United States navy, followed, and then came the German ambassador at Washington and his brilliantly attired suite of military and naval attaches and secretaries, and the military attache of the German embassy at Mexico, Lieut. Bartles. Following the German ambassador came the of the president of the United States, headed by Dr. Hill, first assistant secretary of state, and including Gen. Corbin, Col. Bingham and Commander Cowles, the brother-in-law of the president.

Capt. Nathan Sargent then called on the prince as special representative of Admiral Dewey. The captain said that he had been sent by the admiral especially to express to the prince the admiral's regret at not being able to greet him personally, and to pay his respects. The list of callers was ended with the mayor's party, which included himself and his private secretary. The German consul general at New York and his suite formed a part of the German ambassador's party.

About an hour was spent by the prince in receiving his callers and in making an admiral's inspection of the troops and crew of the Hohenzollern. Then followed a lunch.

The prince invited to this luncheon those among the Americans among his callers who represented the navy, and besides these there were at the board the members of the prince's suites and members of the German embassy in Washington.

The prince boarded the tug Nina at 3:30 to repay his calls. He was accompanied by one aide and Admiral Evans and Ensigns Evans and Chapin.

Prince Henry gave a dinner last night on board the Hohenzollern. His guests were the German ambassador and suite, the German naval officers and the representatives of the United States army and navy.

In the evening the ships of Admiral Evans' squadron were brilliantly illuminated with electric lights.

Henry Attends a Reception.

Prince Henry last night attended a reception given in his honor by the Deutscher verein at the clubhouse of the organization. He was escorted through the streets from the deck where the Hohenzollern lies to the clubhouse by Squadron A of the national guard, and, attended by his suite, Rear Admiral von Baudissin and his officers and other guests. All the party were in carriages, while at the head of the line rode a detachment of mounted police. In the prince's carriage rode Rear Admiral Evans and Assistant Secretary of State Hill. On reaching the clubhouse the prince was received by President Rudolph Keppler and Vice President Otto T. Schuller. He was ushered into the reception room where were gathered 260 members of the club, with nearly as many more members of their families. The club rooms were handsomely decorated with palms, evergreens and cut flowers, while on one of the walls, on a background of the American colors, hung a portrait of the German emperor. At the special request of Prince Henry the club members and their families were presented to him.

After the reception the prince was driven to the ferry and crossed over to Jersey City, where he boarded a special train for Washington.

IS FREE AT LAST

MISS ELLEN STONE NO LONGER IN THE HANDS OF THE BRIGANDS.

RELEASED FOR SURE THIS TIME

AMERICAN BOARD RECEIVES CONFIRMATION OF THE STORY.

TO PROTECT THE INNOCENT

AMERICANS WILL NOT DIVULGE WHERE AND HOW RANSOM WAS PAID.

Constantinople, Feb. 25. — Miss Ellen M. Stone, the American missionary who, with Mme. Tsilka, was captured by brigands in the district of Salonika Sept. 3 last, has been released and arrived at Strumitza, Macedonia, at 3 o'clock yesterday morning.

Nobody was at Strumitza to meet Miss Stone, as the brigands had given no indication that they proposed to release the prisoners. Mme. Tsilka and her baby were also released at the same time. The first news of Miss Stone's release was contained in a telegram received by Mr. Dickinson, the American consul general at Constantinople, from the American vice consul at Salonica. The telegram gives no details of the release. As Strumitza is near the Salonika-Uskub railroad Miss Stone will proceed to Salonika without delay.

Will Keep It Secret.

London, Feb. 24.—Cabling from Constantinople, the correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says he understands that, owing to the necessity of protecting the innocent persons who assisted them, the American delegates will never divulge where and how the ransom money for the release of Miss Stone was paid. The correspondent learns, however, that the ruse of filling up money bags with lead after the ransom had been paid, with a view to making it appear that the mission to pay the ransom had failed, was completely successful. It is practically certain that the ransom money goes to the Macedonian committee.

Miss Stone, continues the correspondent, is certainly innocent of any knowledge of the plot to kidnap her, but strong suspicions are entertained about some Bulgarians who accompanied her party, or remained behind.

News Is Confirmed.

Boston, Feb. 24.—Secretary Barton of the American board has received the following cablegram confirmatory of the Associated Press dispatch announcing the release of Miss Stone. It was dated Salonika and is unsigned:

"Both Miss Stone and Mme. Tsilka and child released from confinement in good physical condition and good spirits."

Secretary Barton regards this news as absolutely authentic, as the missionaries of the board had been given instructions to send no cablegrams based on mere reports, but to wait until positive information could be given.

BOERS CAPTURE SCOTS GREYS

PRISONERS WOULD BE A BURDEN AND ARE CONSEQUENTLY RELEASED.

ARE TIRED OF THE FIGHT

BOERS IN EASTERN TRANSVAAL SAID TO BE GREATLY DEMORALIZED.

London, Feb. 22.—A detachment of the Scots Greys (Second dragoons), one of Great Britain's crack dragoon regiments, has been cut up by the Boers at Klipdam.

Maj. C. W. M. Feilden and Capt. E. Usher were severely wounded, two men were killed, six were wounded and forty-six were captured.

The news was received yesterday from Lord Kitchener in a dispatch dated at Pretoria, Feb. 19. The Scots Greys formed part of Gen. Gilbert Hamilton's column. The latter, while moving on Nigel Feb. 18 engaged a force of Boers at Klipdam. The Scots Greys became detached, were surrounded and cut off.

Gen. Hamilton was unable to dislodge the Boers from their position, so he continued his march toward Nigel. The Boers released the Greys who had been made prisoners.

Boers Are Ready to Quit.

In a dispatch from Pretoria, the correspondent of the Times says there is no doubt the Boers in the Eastern Transvaal colony are greatly demoralized, and that they are so hard pressed that many are reluctant to continue the struggle. In an intercepted letter from Gen. Piet Viljoen to Mr. Schalkburger, the writer urges the latter to do something to counteract the spirit of surrender among the Boers. It is rumored that Gen. Botha and Schalkburger are endeavoring to arrange a meeting. In spite of these indications, however, there is no ground for believing the war will be immediately over, continues the correspondent. The influence of the Boer leaders may still prevail, and in any case the majority would refuse to be bound by the actions of the Boers in the Eastern Transvaal.

In the speech from the throne he referred to the tranquilizing effect on the country of the government's liberal policy and to the excellent relations existing between Italy and all the powers. Referring to the proposed divorce bill his majesty said:

"In the relations of state and church my government intends to maintain strictly the separation of the civil from the spiritual authority, to honor the clergy, but to confine them in their own domain; to extend unrestricted respect to religious liberty of conscience but to invincibly preserve intact the prerogatives of civil power and the rights of national sovereignty."

CONGRESS.

Lively Discussion of Philippine Question in the Senate.

Washington, Feb. 21.—With the exception of a few minutes given to routine business, the senate devoted its entire session to the Philippine question. Mr. Patterson of Colorado, one of the minority members of the Philippines committee, delivered his first extended speech in the senate, and was given a most attentive and careful hearing. He discussed principally the sedition laws enacted by the Philippine commission, vigorously attacking the authority of the commission to enact and enforce such laws. He compared information furnished by the executive departments of the government with some of the statements of Gov. Taft in his testimony before the Philippines committee with respect to the capabilities of the Philippine people, and declared, with some heat, his belief that Gov. Taft misrepresented the true situation in the islands for motives unknown. He asserted that if the six millions of Christians in the Philippines were Protestant Christians the cruel lies practiced on them by the American authorities would have to stop, as no member would be able to withstand the wrath of the Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians of this country.

Mr. Nelson of Minnesota presented a legal and constitutional argument in support of the government's action in the Philippine archipelago, and sharply criticised Mr. Patterson for injecting into the controversy the question of sectarianism.

Mr. McCumber of North Dakota urged that congress should not bind the future now by a declaration of a definite policy regarding the Philippines, as it was desirable that all possible information should be in hand before a permanent policy was determined upon.

In the House.

The house spent the day working on the Indian appropriation bill. Forty-two of the sixty-two pages were disposed of. Several amendments were adopted but none of much importance.

AN EXPENSIVE VISIT.

Fine of Three Hundred Dollars Is Imposed on Iowan.

He was sentenced to ninety days in jail and to pay a fine of $600 or six additional months in jail. After serving three months he escaped and went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he went into business. Recently he visited the western part of Traill county. Judge Pollock, who had imposed the original sentence, showed Larson some leniency and let him down with the payment of $300.

FIFTY LIVES LOST

DEATH AND DESTRUCTION ARE BROUGHT BY A FIRE IN NEW YORK.

PROPERTY LOSS OVER A MILLION

MAGNIFICENT ARMORY OF SEVENTY-FIRST REGIMENT IS DESTROYED.

HOTEL GUESTS IN A WILD PANIC

PARK AVENUE HOTEL BURNS AND MANY PERSONS PERISHED.

New York, Feb. 22.—Fire that broke out early this morning in the armory of the seventy-first regiment, N. G. N. Y., at Park avenue, Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth streets, spread to the Park Avenue hotel and at least fifty lives were lost, while the damage is roughly estimated at over $1,000,000. One woman, a guest of the hotel, jumped from the fifth story and is believed to be fatally injured. Four bodies had been taken out up to 3:30 this morning, but only one is so far identified, said to be that of Col. Pepper of Louisville, Ky.

The Park avenue hotel will be a total loss. The armory, a magnificent granite structure and one of the finest in the city, was destroyed.

Firemen Do Good Work.

The car barns of the Metropolitan Street Railway company, on an adjoining corner, were threatened with destruction, but the good work of the firemen saved them. The armory occupied the whole block and was occupied also by the Second battery and the First signal corps.

The fire was discovered bursting from a window of the armory on the Thirty-fourth street side, and by the time the firemen arrived the flames had completely enveloped the building and appeared through the roof. Shortly after the cartridges and ammunition exploded.

Shortly after 2 o'clock a thousand pounds of powder in the cellar exploded and the walls of the building were thrown outward. By this time the people living in the neighborhood had been

by the heat and were sheltered in the car barns near by. Many narrow escapes were witnessed and heroic work was done by firemen and spectators.

The guests of the Park Avenue hotel, numbering about 500, were aroused as quickly as possible, but not without panic among the women and children. The firemen poured eleven streams upon the side of the hotel nearest the armory, but in spite of this the third floor caught fire and the flames, eating along the walls of the hotel, spread to the roof.

The firemen ran ladders up on every side of the hotel and attempted to work their way through the hotel, but were driven back by the dense volumes of smoke again and again.

At 4 o'clock Fire Chief Croker announced that he believed there were fifty dead in the corridors and stairways of the Park Avenue hotel.

Firemen Save Many Women.

A little after 3 o'clock the four upper floors of the hotel were a mass of flames and the fire was spreading rapidly down through the structure. It was then apparent that the hotel was doomed.

Notwithstanding the fact that everybody in the hotel had ample time to get out a large number of women were carried down the ladders by firemen, until it was thought everybody had been taken out. Just at this time a woman in her night clothes appeared at a window in the fifth floor and before warning could reach her, flung herself headlong to a portico over the main entrance. It is believed that she will die. Two bodies were found on the fifth floor by the firemen and two more in other parts of the building. It is thought several other bodies will be found in the building.

Admiral Miller Among Victims.

Admiral Miller, U. S. N., retired, who had a room on the fifth floor of the Park Avenue hotel, fell unconscious in his attempt to escape from the burning building. It is stated that he cannot recover. Admiral Miller went through the Windsor hotel fire and the Murray Hill explosion unscathed.

The president, however, was fully aware of his purpose, which was formed many months ago.

Westfield, Mass., Feb. 23.—There is a school war here over the action of the principal of the high school in suspending three young men because they ate onions. GERMANY SILENT.

Manifesting No Interest in the Final Disposition of Manchuria.

Berlin, Feb. 23. — The note of the United States to Russia and China on the subject of commercial rights in Manchuria has been communicated to Germany, but no answer has been made. Germany maintains the attitude, she has previously announced, that Manchuria is outside the sphere of German interests, and she sees no reason to change it.

LAST YEAR'S RECORD.

The Showing Made in 1901 by North Dakota Was Most Encouraging.

Although land sales and the landseeker movement in North Dakota have been surprisingly large up to January of last year, the big business done and the immense movement of 1901 reached figures that surprised the most sanguine. The results speak volumes for the confidence of the general public in the lands of that state. Homeseekers began to arrive in February. March and April saw the figures reach astonishing proportions. The mid-summer movement was small, but beginning with September and continuing until the first of the year, the settler and the investor kept up the invasion. The fact that the cheap lands of the Northwest were rapidly disappearing seemed to be realized by thousands at the same time. Land offices in the Dakotas were overrun with applicants for the government domain, thousands of whom found that they came too late. An instance of what the invasion amounted to is seen in the returns of the land office at Minot, N. D., for the year. It was but a few years ago when the Minot land office, as well as other land offices in the Dakotas, did not transact enough business to pay the salary of an ordinary clerk. A prominent North Dakota politician gave up the Minot land office in disgust in 1894, because business was so slack.

From Jan. 1, 1901, to Dec. 17, the Minot land office recorded 5,621 original homestead entries; 614 commuted homestead proofs; 81 final homestead proofs; 79 desert land entries; 82 coal declaratory statements; 4 coal proofs; 60 soldiers' declaratory statements; 4 permits. In addition to these, 1,173 contests were instituted.

For years following its construction the Soo railway ran through a portion of North Dakota, mile after mile of which contained no inhabitants. The same is true of the Northern Pacific. In the big profits made in flax raising this year, the territory along the Soo made a marvelous showing. Farmers along the newly-settled lands of the Northern Pacific have made money on both grain and stock. This includes many people who came into the Northwest in 1901.

Well-informed railway men place the number of home-seekers who came into the Northwest in 1901, including Montana and the coast states, at 150,000. The home-seeker movement in 1902 is confidently expected to reach the grand total of 200,000. Large tracts of land in Dakota and Wisconsin will be on the market this year for the first time, and thousands of Eastern farmers are anxious to secure first choice. The Northern Pacific Railway company, early last year, disposed of all of its land grant in North Dakota east of the Missouri river. Before the close of 1902 its entire grant in that state will be on the market, and much of it in the hands of small farmers and small stockmen.

WARD COUNTY'S GROWTH.

No Section of the State Being Developed More Rapidly.

There is no section of the state that is being developed more rapidly than Ward county. With an empire larger than some of the Eastern states, and with a soil along the Mouse River valley and many other streams within the boundaries of the county that exceeds any other region of the West in fertility, it is no wonder that section of the state is the mecca of so many homeseekers from the East. In addition to the value of the soil for agricultural purposes, demonstrated in both flax and wheat crops, the entire county is underlaid with the best lignite coal beds yet opened up. The coal is of a darker and drier quality than that mined in other sections, and commands a slightly advanced price.

The county is well divided by the Great Northern railroad, which runs east and west, and the Soo, from the south to the north. Dozens of new towns have been opened up within the past year, and more are being planned. Other branches of the railways are outlined, and Minot promises to become one of the best towns in the West.

There are two or three plans to divide the county. One, to set off the old county of Renville, with Renville as the county seat. Another scheme has been discussed, to make a division of the county east and west, with Kenmare or Bowbells as the county seat of the northern part. Nearly all the settlers are from Iowa, Missouri and Southern Minnesota. They are experienced farmers and are of the very highest class of intelligent immigrants.

WHEAT ON HAND NOT SO MUCH.

North Dakota's Supply Not as Large as Generally Thought.

There has been considerable discussion in the state over the reports of the amount of wheat on hand. Some elevator representatives are credited with the statement that at least one-third of the crop is still in the granaries, because the farmers have plenty of money, and there is no immediate necessity of putting the grain on the market. The statement seems hardly borne out by the facts, and the amount of wheat in the state is, perhaps, smaller than usually thought. The crop was overestimated, because of the acreage uncut. Many estimators base the yield as indicated by what was harvested on the acreage said to have been sown, which boosted the figures beyond the actual yield. Private grain buyers assert that there is little more wheat in the state now than will be needed for seed, especially as established farmers will have to supply the wants of the new settlers in the northwestern part of the state.

TELEPHONE EXTENSION.

Much Enthusiasm Over the Question in Many Sections of the State.

Many sections of the state are working up enthusiasm over telephone extensions. Nearly all of the towns are endeavoring to have exchanges established, in order to secure long-distance extensions to connect them with Fargo and the Twin Cities. The Northwestern Telephone company controls nearly all the long-distance lines, with exchanges in the larger cities, and holds out inducements to private companies to organize in the smaller places. Efforts are being made to have the long-distance lines extended from Larimore to Devils Lake, and eventually to Minot.

The people in Foster, Eddy and Benson counties want the line extended north from Jamestown, and those of Kidder and Burleigh want the Northwestern people to go on to Bismarck

FIGHT IN SENATE

TILLMAN AND McLAURIN GIVE AN EXHIBITION OF PUGILISM.

VICIOUS BLOWS ARE EXCHANGED

SENIOR SOLON FROM SOUTH CAROLINA PROVOKES THE CLASH.

BOTH DECLARED IN CONTEMPT

ARE SUSPENDED FROM ALL PRIVILEGES OF THE UPPER HOUSE.

Washington, Feb. 25. Senator Benjamin R. Tillman, the South Carolina fire-eater, justified his reputation Saturday afternoon by an assault with his fists on his colleague, Senator John L. McLaurin, on the floor of the senate.

The two senators thereupon engaged in a fist fight until separated by the officers and members of the senate. Immediately thereafter they were adjudged in contempt of the senate, were formally suspended, and are now members of the upper house of congress in name only, being admitted to the floor, but without the privilege of speaking or voting. Whether either senator is to be permitted to resume his legislative functions is a question of doubt, as the senate has the right to expel both offenders.

Tillman Is Told He Lied.

Mr. Tillman's provocation was the public denunciation of one of his statements as "a willful, malicious, and deliberate lie" by the junior senator from South Carolina. Mr. McLaurin, during his absence from the chamber, had been accused by his colleague of securing the patronage of his state in payment for his vote in favor of the Spanish treaty. Immediately he was notified of the charge Mr. McLaurin went to his seat and requested a hearing, and the denunciation, the personal clash, and the other incidents of the remarkable affair followed.

First Blow Reaches McLaurin.

Mr. Tillman struck the first blow, brushing aside Mr. Teller and upsetting a chair in his rush to confront his colleague. Mr. McLaurin, who had stepped forward to meet his opponent, was hit on the forehead and struck back, landing on Mr. Tillman's nose, drawing blood. A general mix-up followed and the blows were falling thick and fast when the combatants were dragged apart and pinioned by those first to reach them. One of the peacemakers, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Layton, was struck in separating the men.

Senate Hears Explanations.

After the action by the senate suspending both men and they had been given the privilege of the floor to apologize, Mr. Tillman asked the pardon of the senate, but made no apology to his colleague.

Mr. McLaurin's statement was more of an explanation than an apology, and when he began a threat—"If there is any more of that talk"—friends persuaded him to desist, and it is believed another violent scene was averted.

The status of Senators Tillman and McLaurin is that they are in contempt of the senate and only by a vote of the senate can either be recognized to speak or to vote on any question.

SMUGGLING ON A LARGE SCALE.

Forty Thousand Dollars Worth of Diamonds Brought Through in a Belt.

New York, Feb. 25. — Sewed in five small compartments in a belt of red flannel, nearly $40,000 worth of unset diamonds were, it is alleged, smuggled into this country by a passenger who came in yesterday on the Kron Prinz Wilhelm. The passenger gave his name as Michael Leinkran, twenty-one years old, and said he lived in this city. He was arrested by Special Treasury Agent Theobald and later locked up in a police station. The treasury agent was on the watch for Leinkran, as a month ago he received information which led him to believe a smuggling attempt would be made. The prisoner sailed from here about a month ago, and says he was given the belt in Bremen by a stranger who told him to take it to a relative here. He disclaimed all knowledge of its contents.

PAUPERISM IN LONDON GROWS.

Official Reports Show Increase of 3,726 Beggars in British Capital, Due Partly to Cold.

PANIC CAUSES LOSS OF LIFE.

Park Avenue Fire the Third Calamity of the Year.

New York, Feb. 25. — For the third time since New Year's day Park avenue was the scene of loss of human life. First was the collision in the New York Central tunnel at Forty-sixth street and Park avenue; second came the dynamite explosion in the rapid transit subway at Forty-first street, and the third, Saturday, was a fire which started in the Seventy-first regiment armory at Thirty-third street and then spread to the Park avenue hotel, where eighteen persons were killed and many injured. It was the worst hotel fire since the Windsor was destroyed. The fire was first seen at about 1:30 in the morning, in the armory, and in a remarkably short time that building was aflame from end to end. The firemen made their way as best they could through the streets, deep with slush, and did all possible to confine the fire to the armory; but after they had been at work nearly an hour the discovery was made that the hotel was crowded with guests. About the time the hotel was found to be on fire the lights went out and the corridors were filled with smoke. The guests, unable to find their way through the darkened hallway, jumped from windows or ran directly into the flame-swept portions of the building. It is this fact that accounts for the large loss of life, although the hotel was not destroyed.

QUAKERS GET THE NEWS.

Communication With Philadelphia at Last Reopened.

Philadelphia, Feb. 25.—The Philadelphia newspapers at 7:35 o'clock last night, through the Associated Press, came into direct telegraphic touch with the country at large for the first time since 4:10 p. m. Friday. This was accomplished through herculean efforts of the mechanical force of the Western Union Telegraph company in restoring to working condition a number of wires between Philadelphia and Wilmington, Del., which had been prostrated by the fierce sleet storm of Friday. The telegraph officials concentrated their efforts in closing this gap, which covers a distance of twenty-seven miles, as they realized that this would quickest establish communication with New York. This opened connection to Washington, which city was in telegraphic communication with New York, via the circuitous route of Pittsburg, Chicago and Buffalo.

M'GOVERN WINS.

Knocks Out Sullivan in the Fifteenth Round.

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 25.—Terry McGovern defeated Dave Sullivan Saturday night in the arena of the Southern Athletic club after fifteen rounds of as desperate fighting as were ever seen in any ring. Sullivan was counted out and then sought to protest. From the first tap of the gong until the end it was slam-bang, hammer and tongs nearly every second, both men working away with all the energy they possessed. There has seldom been seen a battle where the issue was more in doubt. One round would favor Sullivan, the next McGovern. Then Sullivan would come strong again and even things up once more. McGovern was after his man every second. In the majority of rounds he was on the aggressive. Sullivan put up a wonderful fight, however, was game to the core.

CORTEZ IS CAPTURED.

Filipino Officer Discovered Raising Funds for the Insurrection.

Manila, Feb. 25.—A force of native constabulary at Santa Cruz, province of Laguna, Luzon, has captured Cortez, second in command to the insurgent general, Malvar, and turned him over to the military authorities. Cortez was in fancied security in a suburb of Santa Cruz known as Alipit, and was raising funds for the insurrection. A friendly native informed Inspector Sorensen of this fact and the capture of Cortez followed.

Few insurgents remain in the provinces of Batangas and Laguna. Gen. J. Franklin Bell has accomplished his intended purpose of ridding this district of insurgents, though for the present the civil commission consider it inadvisable to declare the provinces in question to be pacified.

Bristol, Tenn., Feb. 25.—News comes from Russell county, Va., to the effect that while a sheriff's posse was endeavoring to capture George Relkins, a mountaineer who killed an aged negro man and for whose capture a reward of $200 had been offered, Relkins came face to face with Deputy Sheriff J. S. Smith. Realizing his peril, Relkins fired quickly, killing Officer Smith. Others of the party heard the shot and hastened to the scene. They found Smith dead, with a bullet hole in his breast. Relkins had disappeared. A lynching is anticipated if Relkins is captured.

PRESIDENT ANNOUNCES HIS DECISION IN THE SCHLEY CASE.

SAMPSON WAS THE COMMANDER

ALTHOUGH THE BATTLE WAS FOUGHT WITHOUT ORDERS FROM EITHER.

LOOP WAS A GRAVE MISTAKE

NO EXCUSE FOR ANY FURTHER AGITATION OF THIS CONTROVERSY.

Washington, Feb. 21. — President Roosevelt yesterday made public his decision in the appeal of Rear Admiral Schley. He says:

"It appears that the court of inquiry was unanimous in its findings of fact and unanimous in its expressions of opinion on most of its findings of fact. No appeal is made to me from the verdict of the court on these points where it was unanimous. I have, however, gone carefully over the evidence on these points also. I am satisfied that on the whole the court did substantial justice. It should have specifically condemned the failure to enforce an efficient night blockade at Santiago while Admiral Schley was in command. On the other hand I feel that there is a reasonable doubt whether he did not move his squadron with sufficient expedition from port to port to port. The court is a unit in condemning Admiral Schley's action on the point where it seems to me he most gravely erred: his 'retrograde movement' when he abandoned the blockade, and his disobedience of orders and misstatement of facts in relation thereto. It should be remembered, however, that the Majority of These Actions

which the court censures occurred five weeks or more before the fight itself, and it certainly seems that if Admiral Schley's actions were censurable he should not have been left as second in command under Admiral Sampson. His offenses were in effect condoned when he was not called to account for them. Admiral Sampson, after the fight, in an official letter to the department alluded for the first time to Admiral Schley's 'reprehensible conduct' six weeks previously. If Admiral Schley was guilty of reprehensible conduct of a kind which called for such notice from Admiral Sampson, then Admiral Sampson ought not to have left him as senior officer of the blockading squadron on the 3d of July when he (Sampson) steamed away on his proper errand of communication with Gen. Shafter.

"We can, therefore, for our present purposes dismiss consideration of so much of the appeal as relates to anything

Except the Battle.

As regards this, the point raised in the appeal is between Admiral Sampson and Admiral Schley, as to which was in command, and to which was entitled the credit, is either of them was really entitled to any unusual and pre-eminent credit by any special exhibition of genius, skill and courage. The question of command is in this case nominal and technical. Admiral Sampson's ship, the New York, was seen at the outset of the fight from all the ships except the Brooklyn. Four of these five ship captains have testified that they regarded him as present and in command. He signalled 'close in' to the fleet as soon as the first Spanish ship appeared, but his signal was not seen by any American vessel. He was actually under fire from the forts and himself fired a couple of shots at the close of the action with the torpedo boats in addition to signalling the Indiana just at the close of the action. But during the action from him was received by any of the ships that were actively engaged. Admiral Schley at the outset of the action hoisted the two signals 'clear up' and 'close in,' which was simply carrying out the standing orders of Admiral Sampson as to what should be done if the enemy's ships attempted to break out of the harbor. Until after the close of the first portion of the fight at the mouth of the harbor and until after he had made his loop and the Spanish ships were fleeing to the westward, not another American ship noticed a signal from him. When the western pursuit began the Oregon, and the Oregon only, noticed and repeated one of his signals of command, but did not in any shape or way execute any movement or any action of any kind whatsoever in accordance with any order from him. In short, the question as to which of the two men, Admiral Sampson or Admiral Schley was at the time in command, is of merely nominal character. Technically the fleet and Schley, as usual, the western division. The actual fact, the important fact, is that after the battle was started not a helm was shifted, not a gun was fired, not a pound of steam was put on in the engine room aboard any ship actively engaged in obedience to the order of either Sampson or Schley, save on their own two vessels. It was a captains' fight.

Not a Single Order

"Therefore, the credit to which each of the two is entitled rests on matters apart from the claim of nominal command over the squadron; for so far as the actual fight was concerned neither one nor the other in fact exercised any command. Sampson was hardly more than technically in the fight. His real claim for credit rests upon his work as commander-in-chief; upon the excellence of the blockade; upon the preparedness of the squadron; upon the arrangement of the ships, head-on, in a semi-circle around the harbor; and the standing orders in accordance with which they instantly moved to the attack of the Spaniards when the latter appeared. For all these things

The Credit Is His.

"Admiral Schley is rightfully entitled—as is Capt. Cook—to the credit of what the Brooklyn did in the fight. On the whole, she did well, but I agree with the unanimous finding of the three admirals who composed the court of inquiry, as to the 'loop.' It seriously marred the Brooklyn's otherwise excellent record, being, in fact, the one grave mistake made by any American ship on that day. But after the loop had once been taken Admiral Schley handled the Brooklyn manfully and well. There was nothing done in the battle that warranted any unusual reward for either Sampson or Schley. In short, as regards Admirals Sampson and Schley, I find that President McKinley did substantial justice, and that there would be no warrant for reversing his action.

"Both Admiral Sampson and Admiral Schley are now on the retired list. In concluding their report the members of the court of inquiry, Admirals Dewey, Benham and Ramsay, unite in stating that they recommend that no further action be had in the matter. With this recommendation I most heartily concur. There is no excuse whatever from either side for any further agitation of this unhappy controversy. To keep it alive would merely do damage to the navy and to the country."

CONGRESS.

House Again Devotes Itself to Issue Raised by Mr. Wheeler.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Again yesterday the general debate on the Indian appropriation bill was devoted entirely to extraneous topics. As on Tuesday the issue raised by Mr. Wheeler of Kentucky a few days ago came in for considerable attention and was the feature of the session. Mr. Bromwell, an Ohio Republican, Mr. Kern, an Illinois Democrat and Mr. Fleming, a Georgia Democrat, added their views to the literature on the subject, but it was Mr. Boutell, an Illinois Republican, who entertained the house most. He was well fortified with material and with exceeding good temper and a trenchant display of wit he traced the history of what Mr. Wheeler called "truculent sycophancy," as he said, from the day when the first Democratic president purchased a bogus coat of arms to the entertainment of Queen Liliuokalani by the last Democratic president. He finally dismissed the whole subject by saying it should be accepted abroad as one of the "erratic and sporadic phases of American humor."

Mr. Hamilton, a Michigan Republican, enlivened the proceedings with an entertaining speech on trusts.

In the Senate.

The senate continued the consideration of the Philippine tariff bill yesterday, the main speeches being made by Mr. Burrows of Michigan for the bill, and Mr. Money of Mississippi, against it, although Mr. Mitchell of Oregon, Mr. Foraker of Ohio, Mr. Mallory of Florida and Mr. Tillman of South Carolina, all took more or less part in the general debate on the subject.

Hold-Up Man Wanted Money to Start a Company on the Road.

Kansas City, Feb. 21. — C. E. Mortedge, an actor found guilty on his second trial of grand larceny, has been sentenced to the penitentiary for five years. Mortedge, at the point of a revolver, held up the cashier of a restaurant and the bartender in a saloon in the down-town district. He pleaded guilty and said he wanted the money to start a company of players on the road. He was given a sentence of twenty-five years, but the supreme court reversed the verdict on the ground that he committed grand larceny, not highway robbery.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XVII. (Continued.)

"I will reverse the question, Mr. Leathwood," replied the other. "What are you doing here at this hour of the night in the dark? Are there more innocent lives to be sacrificed? Are not you hands red enough?"

Leathwood made a rush at the stranger, but was caught suddenly in a powerful grip and held at arms' length. "Stay where you are. I am not to be hurt by such as you. Hear my message: You will go back to Rickerby's Folly—Because Gilbert Rickerby awaits you there!"

Nugent Leathwood fell back and laughed softly; he could afford to laugh at such a suggestion. "Gilbert Rickerby! Gilbert Rickerby will never wait for anyone again in this world. Why, where have you been, not to know that Gilbert Rickerby is dead?"

"I know nothing of that," replied the stranger. "Only, for your own sake, remember what I say. This young girl is protected, as you never dreamed she could be protected; you will fail in this, as you have failed in all else. One other word. Slip out of the house in the darkness, as you slipped into it; get back to Rickerby's Folly, and look for Gilbert Rickerby there."

Nugent Leathwood heard a faint sound, as of someone moving near him; stretched out his hand again and touched only the blank wall. Shaken and terrified beyond measure, he slunk away down the corridor to the room he had left, opened the door and plunged into it; Cornelius still lay asleep, with his head on the table.

Nugent Leathwood hurried across the room to him and shook him to his feet. "Come out, come out!" he cried. "I won't stay in this house another minute; I've had enough of it. Come outside!"

The old man staggered to his feet, blinked his eyes at the light, and strove to moisten his lips with his tongue. Nugent Leathwod got him by the arm, and took him out and down the stairs; slipped the bolt at the back door and passed with him out into the night. The chill gray dawn was coming up—a mere faint streak—over the housetops.

"You're in a mighty 'urry," grumbled Cornelius, shaking himself and pulling his coat collar about his ears. "What's the matter now?"

"I don't know—I've lost touch of things," replied Nugent, in a low voice. "I've met that fellow who has hung about so mysteriously since the night Gilbert Rickerby came to his father's house. He bids me get back to Rickerby's Folly—says that I shall meet Gilbert Rickerby."

"So you will—so you will!" laughed Cornelius, swaying about and clinging to the other's arm. "You'll meet him, dead, my boy; and you'll 'ave to get rid of 'im, some'ow!"

"I wonder if he could have meant that?" muttered Leathwood to himself. "I wonder if this man knows the secret, too?" He puzzled about it for some time, and at last there flashed upon him a most illuminating suggestion. He stopped in the street and faced Cornelius, and gave voice to it in a startled whisper:

"By Jove—I know who he is! It is that servant of whom Reeks spoke, and who disappeared so mysteriously! Cornelius, the net has closed in!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

"What Man Have I Killed?"

Leathwood was torn by a hundred doubts and fears and terrors; he saw in every circumstance something to be afraid of—some other strand of that net which he knew was closing about him. It was evident that the girl, Olive, was hedged about and protected in a way he had never imagined; it was more evident still that his secret regarding the murdered man was no longer safe. Already Anthony Taggett—whether by accident or design—had blundered upon the story; and now this mysterious stranger had urged him to return to Rickerby's Folly because of something he had hidden there. The wretched man was torn in two directions: fear urged him to put as great a distance as possible between the dark house in St. John's Wood and himself; fear, too, urged him back to it, to cover his deed, if that were possible—or, at all events, to assure himself that his secret was still safe.

So he blundered along in the growing dawn, dragging Cornelius with him, and cursing the old man's slow steps. Coming at last to the station, he came upon straggling workingmen, making their way to it in time for the early trains to London; fell in with them and took a couple of tickets. He arrived at King's Cross, with Cornelius, who was still half asleep and in a mood to grumble at everything, just as London was waking up and beginning a new day. But here a new fear assailed him—the fear that Rickerby's Folly might be watched!

"I won't go there yet," he announced to Cornelius. "It's quite possible that they may be looking for me; if so, I'll disappoint them. You can go at once to the house; set to work, cautiously, to find out from your wife if anyone has been there, or if any inquiries have been made. I'll be there to-night after dark. Find out particularly whether that fellow Reeks has been there with the papers; if he comes, tell him I shall be there to-night, and that he shall have his price; he shan't have it, but you need not tell him that. If we once get him into the house we can get papers or anything else out of him without much trouble. Now, go; expect me about nightfall."

Cornelius Veevers, grumbling still, set off for Rickerby's Folly, leaving his master to get rid of the day the best he could. Truth to tell, Nugent found the time hang heavily on his hands; saw in every face that glanced into his in the streets or in restaurants where he took his meals, suspicion and distrust; feared to find in every paper he looked at some awful headlines about bodies discovered or warrants issued for the arrest of one Leathwood. But at last night came, and he was able to set out for the house with the feeling that, once he reached it, he would at least know the worst.

Even when he got to it he lingered about the adjacent streets for a long time, fearing to go near it, but summoned courage at last to put his key in the lock of the garden gate, and slipped in. The rooms that were usually inhabited were lit up as usual, and the sight of the friendly lights gave him confidence. He let himself into the house and went up stairs. Cornelius Veevers, who had heard his step upon the stairs, came out to greet him.

Not a word was said until the two men were in the room and Nugent had shut the door and set his back against it. Then he saw, by the look in the eyes of Cornelius, that something was very wrong indeed; the placidity of that usually calm old reprobate was broken up and gone.

"Well? What the dickens do you stare at me like that for? What has happened?" he asked, in a sort of fierce whisper.

Cornelius backed away towards the table, and stood leaning against it, drawing one hand across his lips and blinking his eyes. "I—I've only just—just come back from it," he whispered.

"Come back from what? What are you talking about?" asked the other, coming forward from the door to look more closely at the old man. "Why—you've not been drinking, have you?"

Cornelius shook his head. "No, I've not," he retorted. "This is all the thanks a man gits for lookin' after 'is master's interests. I've just been into that—the other 'ouse."

"Well, the sight of what was there shook up your nerves, eh?" sneered Leathwood. "It doesn't take much to upset you—that's pretty evident."

"The sight might 'ave upset me—if there'd been any," retorted the old man. "But it was what wasn't there that startled me."

"Wasn't there? What are you talking about? What wasn't there?"

"The body!" Mr. Veevers nodded slowly, to emphasize his words.

Nugent Leathwood seemed almost to have stopped breathing; he opened his mouth once or twice, as though to speak, and made a quick motion with his hands; at last blurted out hoarsely: "The body not there? You must be mad; you've looked in the wrong place for it."

"'Ave I? Am I likely to forget where we put it; 'aven't I bin every step of the way in my sleep, a 'undred times? In the wrong place, indeed! I tell you the cupboard is empty; the dead man might 'ave walked out of it, for all there is of 'im left."

"Don't talk like that!" cried Leathwood, with a shudder. "You've blundered somehow, you must have done so. Good heavens! the man was dead enough, in all conscience; do you mean to suggest that he has recovered and escaped? Here—give me the light; I'll go and look myself!"

"Go and look, and then say I'm mad afterward," said Cornelius, handing him a candle. "I don't know whether the man was dead or not; I only know he ain't there."

"I'll wager I'll find him fast enough," said Nugent, with a laugh. "Not there, indeed! I almost wish he were not; this has been a blundering business, all through, and I thought to do it so neatly! Here—you can take the light and go in front."

In that order, with Cornelius leading, they went down stairs, and turned into that long passage which connected the two houses, and along which they had carried the body on that night of murder. Near the end of the passage they stopped and drew together; Cornelius softly blew out the candle. Then they could see through the chink of a door at the farther end, a little thin thread of light.

"What does that mean?" whispered Nugent. "Who can be there?"

Cornelius, mustering up some courage, stepped forward quickly; blundered, in the darkness, against his companion, and dropped the candlestick, with a rattle, to the ground. Even while he stooped to fumble for it, the thin thread of light was gone. They got the candle and relighted it, and went forward cautiously; opened the door and passed into the room. Crossing it, after a moment's hesitation, they began to ascend the stairs leading to the upper rooms.

Suddenly, Leathwood caught at the old man's coat and held him still. "Do you hear that?" he breathed.

"What?"

"Someone going on in front of us. A woman, I should think; I can hear the rustle of a dress. Listen." Nugent Leathwood turned to Cornelius, to see if he could read in his face that he also heard the same sound.

The old man listened intently for a moment, and then shook his head. "It's your fancy," he whispered. "There may be ghosts 'ere; I shouldn't be surprised. But they're not likely to make a noise. Fancy, I tell you."

They went on again, Leathwood stopping every now and then to listen—fretting himself with the thought that they were watched, or that they might, in any turn of the stairs, come across something terrible and unearthly. But they came at last, without adventure, to the room that had once belonged to Gilbert Rickerby—the room in which they had hidden the body. Here Cornelius, feeling that he was about to be vindicated, set down the candle and pointed to the cupboard.

"Now, Mr. Leathwood, perhaps you won't mind openin' that there cupboard and lookin' for yourself. I 'ad my turn. Now it's yours."

Leathwood shook his head. "No; I'd rather not," he said. "Since you are so positive about it, open the door yourself; I'll look fast enough, if what you say is true."

Cornelius was moving slowly towards the cupboard, with a grin upon his face, when the startled voice of his master recalled him; he stopped and faced about instantly. Nugent had picked up from the floor a crumpled white handkerchief, and was holding a corner of it to the light.

"Well, what's that?" asked Cornelius.

"Look here! I found this on the floor here; read the name on it. Don't stand staring there like a fool! Come here and read this name. Am I going mad, or is this name burnt into my brain? Now, read it!"

Mr. Veevers took the thing in his hand and bent over it, so as to get it within the range of his vision; read aloud, in a sort of dazed whisper: "Gilbert Rickerby." Then he raised his head, and the two men looked into each other's eyes in terror-stricken perplexity.

Nugent Leathwood was the first to recover; he caught up the candle and strode across to the cupboard, hesitated for a moment with his hand upon the fastening, and then threw it open. The cupboard was empty!

After staring at it for a moment or two in a dazed fashion, he came slowly back to Cornelius and set down the candle. Cornelius glanced at him with a grin, and muttered: "Well, what did I tell you?"

"If I had seen this thing done alone," murmured Nugent, slowly, "I should have said that my senses had cheated me; but, with two of us, there is no mistake about it. One thing is certain—the man was dead when we put him there."

"Was 'e?" asked Cornelius, quietly.

"Why, of course he was!" Nugent faced round upon him savagely. "If he wasn't dead, then I never saw a dead man yet. The question is—what has become of the body? It couldn't move itself; someone has taken it away."

"Well, I 'ope they like it, now they've got it," said Cornelius.

"But who should take it? If there was anybody in the business who was well-disposed toward us, who feared trouble for us, and so wanted to get it out of the way, I could understand; but no one knows this but ourselves—no one comes near this place."

"I wonder what that light was we saw in the room down below?" remarked Cornelius. "That wasn't fancy."

"And this handkerchief; there's no fancy about this," said Nugent, taking it from the hand of the old man. "This has been found by someone—someone who has had to do with the removal of the body—and dropped here. Perhaps it may have even fallen from the body itself. Cornelius, what does it mean? What business is going on in this place of which we know nothing? What secret agency is at work to undermine all we do, and strike at the root of all we have done?"

"It beats me," replied Cornelius, helplessly. "'Owever, there' no gittin' over the fact that the body's gone—an', more than that, it's out of our way. I've go: a sort of feelin' in my bones that somethin' is goin' to 'appen to-night that'll clear the way; I don't know what it is, but the feelin' is there."

Nugent Leathwood had been thinking deeply while the old man spoke. Looking up now, with something of a smile upon his haggard face, he put his thoughts into words.

"After all, there is nothing much to fear. Gilbert Rickerby entered the house alone; who is to say what happened to him inside it? Cheer up, Cornelius; the body is gone, the man is gone; we'll fight through this yet. There is only one man I fear."

"Who's that?"

"The servant—the mysterious man, who has seemed to be in all this business, and yet has not been in it. I am confident that it was that man I met in the dark in the inn last night. I am sure, too, that he knows or suspects something. Well, let him suspect; he's got to prove, and proof is not easy."

"Easy? It ain't possible." Mr. Veevers walked across the room and calmly shut the cupboard door. "It works both ways, master. If them as are friendly to us (whoever they may be) 'ave taken the body—well an' good; if them we are workin' against 'ave taken it—well an' good again. Don't you see that the thing is gone, an' we 'aven't got to trouble about it?"

"Perhaps you're right; I wish I could think so," replied Nugent. "But we'll get back into the other house. I expect that fellow Reeks will turn up to-night, and I must'nt miss him. Besides, I want to find out if he has been here already."

They went back the way they had come—cautiously, and listening at every step—and regained the room in which Nugent had found the old man. Then a sudden idea occurred to the latter, and he gave voice to it.

"It seems to me," he said, slowly and thoughtfully; "it seems to me that Jemima may know something about this 'ere. She's got a 'abit of wanderin' about the place, by night, as well as by day; she's got some mad notion in 'er 'ead that 'er old mistress is still there an' wants 'er. It might be well to try and screw something out of 'er."

"Yes; I had thought of that. Fetch her here. By the way," added Nugent, as the other was shuffling out of the room, "I suppose you feel sure as to her loyalty; you don't think it likely that she is in the plot—if there is one—against us, do you?"

Mr. Veevers stopped, shook his head knowingly, and grinned. "Don't you worry about that," he replied. "Jemima ain't got wits enough to plot against anyone. She goes about with what eyes she's go' shut, and 'er ears shut, too. You'll see if I ain't right, when I come to ask 'er a question or two. Jemima plot! Well—that's a good 'un!"

He went out of the room, and was presently heard at a distance summoning his spouse to appear before Leathwood, in those gentle terms used in his conversation with her. In a minute or two he came back into the room, followed meekly by the old woman, whose demeanor was as unruffled as ever. Leathwood, meanwhile, had made up his mind that it would be bad policy to frighten or threaten the old woman; he determined to bring into play his most persuasive manner.

"Ah, Jemima, there you are," he began, with a smile. "I just wanted a word with you for a moment."

"At your service, sir," said the old woman, bending suddenly at the knees, in a sort of awkward curtsy.

"You know, Jemima, that, although you have only one house to attend to here, there are really two. The second one has long remained empty and deserted, except for such mouldy furniture as may still be in it. You know that, don't you?"

"I ain't likely to forget the 'ouse that was once the place my por dead mistress lived in," said the old woman, in a low voice. Between those half-closed lids of hers she was watching him pretty narrowly, although her face never changed, and although he set her down in his own mind, as a half-witted dullard, whose senses and emotions had long since been ground out of her by hard work and dull, monotonous days.

"Quite so," he replied, easily. "But what I wanted to say was this: That although the house is untenanted, there is always the fear that—well—that tramps and other persons might try to get into it for the sake of shelter. I suppose it is properly locked up and secured?"

"There ain't nobody bin in it all these years, not that I knows on," she said, in the same dull, level voice.

"And you never hear—never hear any noises there—eh?" He asked the question in a lower voice, and with some hesitation.

The old woman raised her head and looked at him sharply for a moment; then laughed, a quaint, dry sort of laugh, which seemed to shake him as the sight or sound of something uncanny might have done. "Oh, yes—I 'ear noises enough," she said. "Many's the time at nights I've 'eard an' seen things as might 'ave upset me if I 'adn't known what they was. Why, you saw 'em once yourself."

"I? What do you mean?"

"Why, not so long since you saw a shadder on the blind of my poor, dead boy's room; you pointed it out to me, an' said—"

"There, never mind what I said. You talk of things you've seen and heard; I tell you now, I don't believe it. You're in some fiendish plot here; you know you are! You've got people in that house—or you've had them in there. Come—I want the truth, and I mean to have it."

"I'm on'y tellin' you the truth," replied the old woman, imperturbably. "Shall I say it again? There ain't been no one in that 'ouse but Master Gilbert Rickerby—"

"Take her away! Stop her tongue!" cried Nugent, with his hands upon his ears. "You were right, Cornelius; her wits have gone long since. Take her away!"

Mr. Veevers seized Jemima by the shoulders and unceremoniously pushed her out of the room and shut the door upon her. Immediately afterward there came a quick knock at it. Cornelius opened it, was thrust aside, and Ursula Sewell came in. For a moment or two Leathwood and the woman scowled at each other in silence.

"Well," he said, at last, "and what do you want? I don't know how long you mean to hang on here, or what you'll gain in the long run. I don't want to create a scandal, or I'd turn you out of the gate into the street; failing that, I suppose I must wait until you choose to go of your own accord."

"I want to speak to you—I must speak to you," she said, slowly, with a glance at Cornelius.

"Well, say what you have to say, and be done with it," said Leathwood, turning away and looking over some papers at the desk. "Again, what do you want?"

"I want to speak to you—alone," she went on, with another glance at the grinning Mr. Veevers.

"I don't think that's necessary," he said. "Cornelius knows all that I do, and everything about my business. If you have anything to say, you can say it; if you object to his presence, you can go."

Ursula hesitated a moment or two, standing with one hand on her breast, as though to control the passionate things she would have said, glanced again at the old man, and spoke:

"I wanted to tell you, if you will listen to me, that you are in danger," she said.

Leathwood turned swiftly towards her, waiting for her to go on. With another curious gesture of the hands, half as though what she said were forced from her and she said it against her wish, the woman went on:

"You are in great danger. I know nothing of the matter, or of what you are trying to do; but I know that all your hopes and your desires are founded upon what can never be, and never has been. I scarcely know what I am saying, but I know that I speak the truth. You believe Gilbert Rickerby to be dead?"

"I know him to be dead," said Nugent, in a low voice. "It has been proclaimed in all the papers that he is dead—that he died in hospital. What then?"

"That is where your danger lies," she cried, earnestly. "Nugent' don't turn away from me; only believe in me and trust me, and I'll save you. Gilbert Rickerby is not dead!"

Nugent Leathwood seemed to reel as from a blow; recovered himself, and shook his fist at Cornelius. "I knew it—I knew it," he cried. "The body gone—slipped away without help, and without a soul to aid it. By Jove!—she's right—she's right!"

"Wait a bit—wait a bit," urged Cornelius, putting up his hand. "You don't know what you're talking about, master. P'r'aps this lady 'as something more to tell us. It seems to me that we've all bin 'avin' dreams an' visions of some sort. Now, miss, p'r'aps you'll explain."

"I can't explain—I won't," said Ursula. "Only I know that a man called Gilbert Rickerby has been in this place; that the girl for whom you cast me aside has met and talked with him; that they are lovers. I know nothing beyond that."

Nugent Leathwood stood perfectly still in the middle of the room, staring at the girl. Once, in a dazed fashion, he put his hand to his head; then he let the hand fall to his side again. Finally, with a sudden, fierce, impatient gesture, he seemed to sweep the woman away from him.

"I won't listen—I won't believe it. You—like all the rest—are in this vile plot to tell me that the man is not dead. Come—since you know so much, you jade—you shall tell me something more. This man you call Gilbert Rickerby, what is he like?"

"A tall man, ith a bronzed skin and a fair mustache; I remember he had a cut across his cheek bone—a deep scar," replied Ursula, steadily.

"I thought so," said Nugent, as if to himself—"the servant! So that's the solution of the mystery, is it? The servant plays the master to this mad girl, and persuades her that he is Gilbert Rickerby. Cornelius, this matter gets deeper than I thought."

"I know nothing about it, Nugent," broke in the woman. "But I do know that your pursuit of this girl is useless, and that she knows her former lover to be alive. Do you imagine for a moment that—mad or not—she would turn to any other man and call him Gilbert Rickerby?"

"I believe the woman's right," muttered Cornelius. "There's somethin' 'ere we don't understand."

Nugent Leathwood paced the room for a moment or two in silence, and broke out at last into muttered words. "Gilbert Rickerby not dead—yet I'll swear he was dead enough when I—"

There came another knock at the door, and Jemima entered. Apparently seeing nothing as usual, she said, in the calmest fashion:

"There's a party here of the name of Reeks as wants to see you, Mr. Leathwood."

"All right, I'll see him in a moment. By the way, Jemima"—he turned quickly to her as she was going out of the room; there was a new thought in his mind—"this dead Gilbert Rickerby—you remember him as a boy?"

"If I don't remember my boy, I don't know who should," replied he old woman wih a smile.

"Can' you—can you describe him?" asked Nugent, hesitatingly. "I—I never saw him, you know—except when he was dead—at the hospital. I wonder," he laughed and nodded reassuringly to her—"I wonder if your memory is good?"

"I seem to see 'im now," said the old woman, with her eyes raised upwards. "A tall, fair lad, with the 'andsomest, brightest face in the world. It wasn't even spoilt—not in my eyes—by that cut across 'is cheek bone."

Nugent Leathwood sank into a chair and gazed blankly around the room; he seemed unconscious of the fact that he was not alone.

"Good heavens!" he whispered; "what man have I killed?"

THE OLDEST DOLL IN AMERICA.

Brought to This Country in 1699, When Williamb Came Over in the Good Ship Canterbury.

In 1699, when William Penn sailed from England in the good ship Canterbury for his second visit to the American colony, of which, so far, scant notice has been taken, he brought with him an English doll, believed to-be today the sole surviving representative of that voyage across the Atlantic. This doll, selected by William Penn's daughter, Letitia, was sent by her to a little Miss Rankin of Philadelphia, and, after 200 eventful years, it still retains, in a marked degree, much of the brightness and beauty of those early days, when she was the pet of one little Quakeress after another. Her dress, not being changed with the changing fashions, is the court dress of that period, and is of striped and delicately-tinted brocade and velvet; the skirt is very full, and is distended over an enormous hoop. She is twenty inches in height, and her figure is long-waisted and slender, as are the pictures of court beauties in those days. The full-basque spreading out from the belt over the skirt, enhances the slender effect. The hair is rolled away from the face, much in the fashion of to-day. She now lives in Montgomery county, Maryland, in the retirement her great age demands, only being removed from her careful wrappings when strangers, whom her quiet fame has reached, come to make close acquaintance with this, the oldest doll in America.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Quick-Witted Helpmate.

The Rev. Clinton Locke, who was for nearly half a century rector at Grace Episcopal church, Chicago, was the immediate predecessor of Ernest M. Stires, recently called to New York. Dr. Locke tells the story of how his quick-witted wife once saved him from an awkward situation. One afternoon, while enjoying a good book in the parlor, his wife noticed a woman coming up the front steps whom he particularly detested. The doctor fled precipitately, leaving his wife to meet the caller. After a half-hour had passed, Dr. Locke came out of his study, and listened at the head of the stairs. Hearing nothing below, he called down to his wife:

"Has that horrible old bore gone yet?"

The caller was still there. Mrs. Locke was equal to the emergency, however, and she called back:

"Yes, dear; she went nearly an hour ago. Mrs. A. is here now."—Rochester Post Express.

Vindicated.

He was an untidy looking man, with more than the average coating of grime on his face, hands and clothes, and the charge against him was that of chasing the plaintiff round and round the bar parlor of a public house, slashing at him furiously all the while with a very clumsy pocket knife.

"What time did you say I ran you around that parlor?" he demanded, with all a tiger's fury, of the plaintiff.

"At 7 o'clock in the morning," tremulously replied the man with the bandaged head.

"There, gentlemen, that shows he's telling lies," bawled the prisoner to the bench. "How could I have been stabbin' him in a public house at the time he names, when at 7 o'clock every morning, as regularly as clock-work"—here he looked around like one confident of acquittal—"I take my bath?"—Cassell's Journal.

Quite the Contrary.

A WONDERFUL SHRUB—CURES KIDNEY AND BLADDER Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

In the short time that Alkavis, the Kava-Kava shrub compound, has been before the American public, its Cures of various forms of Kidney and Bladder diseases, Rheumatic and Gouty Disorders, have been numbered by the thousands. Alkavis has not been extensively advertised, through Newspapers or otherwise, but has made its way entirely on its merits, and through the fact that every sufferer can make free trial of its wonderful curative powers, and judge of its value from personal experience.

Mr. John Will, Route 3, Rural Delivery, Muncie, Ind.

The President of the Suffolk Hospital and Dispensary, Boston, Mass., established under the laws of the State, writes Sept. 18th, 1901, as follows:

"Gentlemen:—As a rule we are unwilling to endorse any preparation the formula of which is not made public to the medical profession, but the use of your product has so fully convinced us of its remedial value that our objection has been overcome. Let us say in a word that we have tested it on some chronic cases of Bladder and Rheumatic trouble, and it has Cured when old and established compounds have wholly failed. Our good words are at your disposal, for all should know of the good accomplished by its use.

James Thomas, Esq., of the Board of Review Bureau of Pensions, Washington, D. C., writes: Was cured of a usually fatal Kidney Trouble after many physicians had failed and he had given up all hope of recovery. Mr. John Will, Muncie, Ind., writes: Was told by two physicians, one being my son-in-law, that neither he nor any other doctor could cure me, but nevertheless "Alkavis" did the work. Many ladies also join in testifying to the wonderful curative powers of Alkavis in Kidney and allied diseases, and other troublesome afflictions peculiar to womanhood, which can not with propriety be described here.

That you may judge of the value of this Great Discovery for yourself, we will send you one Large Case by mail Free, only asking that when cured yourself you will recommend it to others. It is a Sure Specific Cure and can not fail. Address, The Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 406 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

ANOTHER GRAND REPORT.

From His Majesty's Dockyard, Portsmouth, England, Where Upwards of 15,000 Men Are Constantly Employed.

Some time ago the Portsmouth Times and Naval Gazette published a most thrilling and remarkable experience of the wife of Mr. Frederick Payne, himself connected with the Portsmouth dockyard for many years. The report produced a great sensation, not only in Portsmouth, but throughout the country, being considered of sufficient importance for reproduction and editorial comment by the leading metropolitan and provincial press of England, as showing the marvelous power which St. Jacobs Oil possesses as a cure for Rheumatism, its application having effected a perfect cure in the case of Mrs. Payne, after having been a helpless cripple and given up by several physicians.

We have now further evidence of its intrinsic value as a Pain Conqueror. Our readers will do well to follow the intelligent and highly interesting details as given in Mrs. Rabbets own words:

"To the Proprietors St. Jacobs Oil—

"Gentlemen: My husband, who is a shipwright in His Majesty's dockyard, met with an accident to his ankle and leg, spraining both so badly that his leg turned black from his knee to his toes. The doctor said it would be months before he could put his foot to the ground, and it was doubtful whether he would ever get proper use of his leg again.

"A few days after the accident I had a book left at the door telling about St. Jacob's Oil, so I procured a bottle from our chemist, Mr. Arthur Creswell, 379 Commercial Road. I began to use St. Jacob's Oil, and you may guess my surprise when in about another week from that date my husband could not only stand, but could even walk about, and in three weeks from the time I first used the Oil my husband was back at work, and everybody talking about his wonderful recovery. This is not all. Seeing what St. Jacob's Oil could do gave me faith in your Vogeler's Curative Compound, also favorably mentioned in the book left at my house. I determined to try the compound on my little girl, who was suffering from a dreadful skin disease, the treatment of which has cost me large sums of money in going from one doctor to another with her, all to no purpose.

She has taken two bottles of Vogeler's Curative Compound, and one would now hardly take her for the same child. Her skin has such a nice healthy color after the sallow look she has always had.

"I shall never cease to be thankful for the immense benefit we have derived from these two great remedies of yours. I think it a duty to recommend these medicines now I have proved their value.

(Signed.) "Elizabeth S. Rabbets,
"93 Grafton Street, Mile End,
"Landport, Portsmouth, England."

A liberal free sample of Vogeler's Compound will be sent by addressing St. Jacob's Oil, Ltd., Baltimore.

The above honest, straightforward statement of Mrs. Rabbets evidence is stronger and far more convincing than pages of paid advertisements, which, though in themselves attractive, yet lack that convincing proof which Mrs. Rabbets' description of her own experience supplies. St. Jacob's Oil has a larger sale throughout the world than that of all other remedies for outward application combined, and this can only be accounted for from the fact of its superiority over all others.

STRONGER CARS NEEDED

Where the Railroad System of America Is Defective

The appalling disaster on the Wabash which caused such heavy loss of life involuntarily sets human invention at work. It is recognized that the human equation must be taken into account and that in spite of every precaution employed accidents will occur. Men are bound to make mistakes, and when they are dealing with destructive agencies mistakes prove costly. Our great volume of commerce, the thousands who ride daily in the cars on business or pleasure bent, crowd the railroads with traffic, and occasionally, in the midst of this mighty rush and bustle, somebody blunders and calamity follows.

In earlier days train traveled at slower speed, coaches were more fragile in construction. They were lighted by kerosene lamps. They were heated by car stoves. A slight collision served to telescope the weaker coaches. The broken lamps poured kerosene over the combustible ruins, and the deadly car stove communicated fire to the heap, which soon became the funeral pyre of the maimed and imprisoned passengers.

The lamp gave place to the Pintsch gas system and that is giving way to electric lighting, which employs no combustibles at all. The car stove has given way to steam heat, supplied from the locomotive, but still collisions occur, and with fearful loss of life, at times. The principal trouble appears to be that some of the coaches, especially the day coaches, in service are too fragile to stand the grinding, crushing force brought to bear upon them during a collision. The instant that one of them yields to the pressure of the car ahead it is crushed or telescoped and all its passengers are killed or crippled. Those who are fortunate enough to be in the Pullmans and other strong coaches usually escape with bruises and a few cuts from broken glass.

If any lesson is to be drawn from the disaster at Seneca, says the Detroit Journal, it is that every car in the train ought to be as nearly proof against collapse as the best material can make it. Then, in case two fast trains should meet, the cars would only be tumbled about on the ground, like so many strong boxes. In such a case the passengers would have a show for their lives, because the natural instinct is to hold fast to something at such a time. The danger of a fire horror would be lessened, because there would be less kindling wood to be lighted.

Ways of Misers

Hoarders of Money Find Queer Hiding Places For It.

It may not be entirely sanitary or perfectly convenient to wear the same petticoat eleven years without ever taking it off, but there are probably many people who would do it for $1,700. That is what Mrs. Lee of Jersey City did, and now her son William, who found the money after she died, is trying by law to get it back from the man he loaned it to. If he had followed his mother's example and worn the petticoat he would have his money still.

It is not on record that the possession of the money did Mrs. Lee any good. She saved her earnings while employed as a nurse in a hospital in Baltimore and when she left she put the money in a chamois bag and sewed it into her petticoat. There she kept it continually, night and day, for the next eleven years, and when she was dying she took the petticoat off, handed it to her son, and said:

"Here, William, is your heritage. Search it well. It is worth more than you would think."

William searched accordingly and found the funds, but a wily man got them away from him, and now he is poor again.

William's mother had a somewhat unusual method of preserving her savings, but she was only following a tendency which crops out in strange ways in many people. There is something of the squirrel in half of humanity. A squirrel in a park will catch a peanut from the hand of a bystander, run a few steps, and hide it in the ground so securely that the man who saw it hidden cannot find the place where it was put. So these squirrel people will take odd coins and hide them so that not the bystander nor that professional finder, the burglar—sometimes not the hider himself—can find them.

Harey B. MacLean, who lived in Wheeling, W. Va., for many years, was one of those who cannot find the hiding place again themselves. For the first time in his life he was to leave town. For some reason he could never explain he feared that his bank would fail while he was gone, so he took the money he had saved out of it and hid it. That was the last time he ever saw the money, though he broke down from worry due to his search for it and died a year later. He had not been in his grave two days when his son's wife began housecleaning. She found some old shoes in a closet and had her husband try them on before throwing any away, and in the toe of one he found an obstruction. Sure enough, there was the lost money—$826.18—rolled up tight and securely concealed.

PLACE OF PENANCE

Alcatraz Island Where Frank Rakowski Will Suffer.

"Ten years' imprisonment in the military prison at Alcatraz island will be likely to cause regret in the heart of Frank Rakowski, the common soldier who threatened the life of President Roosevelt," said an ex-regular. "The telegraph dispatches tell the story of the remark that will cause this soldier ten years of hard work and then a dishonorable discharge.

"Alcatraz island is a rock in San Francisco bay. It is some two or three miles from shore, and rises high above the mainland. But one boat, that a government charge, lands there, and this only at certain times of the day—never at night. No one is allowed to go near the island, and no one lands unless he has permission. Sentinels guard the rock-bound coast and perched high in the center of the island is a tower, in which there is always a sentinel on duty. He can see every part of the little island from this post. Guard duty only comes to the soldiers of the two batteries of artillery stationed there, but the prisoners work during the day.

"A load of them is taken daily to the Presidio, well guarded, and work throughout the day around the post, in the national cemetery, and out toward the Golden Gate in the big piece of rolling land, a beautiful spot, with a fine view of the outer bay and the ocean. It was near here that the awful catastrophe in which Consul Wildman, coming home from Hong-Kong, lost his life. Many lives were sacrificed by the boat striking a rock in the night, while trying to enter the harbor. There is an old Spanish fort near.

"Some 250 government prisoners are usually kept at Alcatraz island. They are known by numbers, and their names are almost forgotten even by themselves. On their uniform overalls are great white or red numbers that denote whether they are in for long or short terms. These numbers are on their backs, just above one knee, and again on the back of the leg. The sentinels are instructed to shoot to kill, after calling once to the prisoner to halt.

"Frank Rakowski will pay dearly for his offense against the nation which he had taken oath to defend."

Relic Found in Scotland.

An interesting relic of the Roman occupation of Scotland has just been discovered during building operations at Falkirk, in the form of a large stone, about nineteen inches broad, ten inches thick, over four feet high and weighing probably half a ton. It is beautifully sculptured in high relief. The ornamentation is divided into two panels, the larger one being at the top. These panels are separated by a band about one and a half inches broad, which is carried round both panels, meeting at an angle at the top of the stone. Under the angle is a beautiful shell-like device, delicately executed. The upper panel is completely filled by a horse and rider, the warrior carrying a sword triumphantly aloft. The figure is pictured in full armor and bears a shield. The lower panel represents a naked man—a wild Celt, presumably—prone on the ground, his shield and weapon lying beside him. The profile is perfect and the stone is in a complete state of preservation.

Willing to Pay the Money.

Readers of Jacob Grimm's beautiful stories will remember that one of his prettiest tales ends with the words, "Whoever refuses to believe this story owes me a thaler." One winter morning a little girl rang the doorbell and asked the servant if Herr Prof. Jacob Grimm was at home. When informed that he was not she said, politely: "Will you please hand him this thaler when he returns?" The servant took the coin, glanced at it curiously and inquired who sent it and what it was for. "I owe him the money myself," said the little girl. "Why? What for?" "Because I don't believe the story about the wolf."

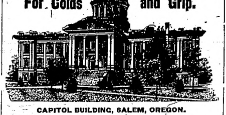
GOVERNOR OF OREGON

Uses Pe-ru-na For Colds in His Family and Grip.



CAPITOL BUILDING, SALEM, OREGON.

A Letter From the Executive Office of Oregon.

Pe-ru-na is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Letters of congratulation and commendation testifying to the merits of Pe-ru-na as a catarrh remedy are pouring in from every State in the Union. Dr. Hartman is receiving hundreds of letters daily. All classes write these letters, from the highest to the lowest.

The outdoor laborer, the indoor artisan, the clerk, the editor, the statesman, the preacher—all agree that Pe-ru-na is the catarrh remedy of the age. The stage and rostrum, recognizing catarrh as their greatest enemy, are especially enthusiastic in their praise and testimony.

Any man who wishes perfect health must be entirely free from catarrh. Catarrh is well-nigh universal; almost omnipresent. Pe-ru-na is the only absolute safeguard known. A cold is the beginning of catarrh. To prevent colds, to cure colds, is to cheat catarrh out of its victims. Pe-ru-na not only cures catarrh, but prevents. Every household should be supplied with this great remedy for coughs, colds and so forth.

The Governor of Oregon is an ardent admirer of Pe-ru-na. He keeps it continually in the house. In a recent letter to Dr. Hartman he says:

STATE OF OREGON,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
SALEM, May 9, 1898.

The Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Dear Sirs—I have had occasion to use your Pe-ru-na medicine in my family for colds, and it proved to be an excellent remedy. I have not had occasion to use it for other ailments.

Yours very truly, W. M. LORD.

It will be noticed that the Governor says he has not had occasion to use Pe-ru-na for other ailments. The reason for this is, most other ailments begin with a cold. Using Pe-ru-na to promptly cure colds, he protects his family against other ailments. This is exactly what every other family in the United States should do. Keep Pe-ru-na in the house. Use it for coughs, colds, la grippe, and other climatic affections of winter, and there will be no other ailments in the house. Such families should provide themselves with a copy of Dr. Hartman's free book, entitled "Winter Catarrh." Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio.

The village council of Warren will give H. Fant, of this city, an exclusive franchise for a term of three years to construct a long distance telephone line through that city, providing the Northwestern does not decide to build ther within thirty days. The line which Mr. Fant proposes to build will extend from this city to Pembina, N. D., and give the people of that section connection with the outside world. The people of Warren are foolish if they do not accept Mr. Fant's proposition, and thereby enjoy this modern convenience.

In the Fargo land office a homestead entry has been made by L. T. Bowers from Iowa on a claim located in Foster county. The procedure which made the entry possible is somewhat interesting as Fred M. Van Bergen, who resides near Carrington, had previously entered on the claim, filing in 1896. He made great improvements on the place, putting up a handsome residence and finally made final proof. After the allowance of final proof Bowers entered on the scene and contested the claim on the ground that Van Bergen had not fulfilled the requirements of law. The land office decided from the evidence that such was the case and Van Bergen's entry was cancelled. The claim which is a valuable one, and has a large residence on it, will now pass to Bowers by virtue of the entry just made.

TODAY.

Treaty to Be Made With the Indians.

D. N. Winton returned to this city yesterday from the Red Lake Agency, and announces that nearly every Indian on the Red Lake reservation are now assembled at the agency to meet the "Big Ogahmah," Maj. McLaughlin. A meeting was held yesterday with the Indians, and today a treaty will probably be made. Everything looks favorable and it is not thought that there will be any trouble.

Louis French Injured.

Word was received last week of a very peculiar accident on the Great Northern a short distance east from Bagley on the Duluth line. Louis French, a former resident of this city running on one of the regular freights, who looking ahead at about 2 a. m. saw a very bright light close to the engine. He shouted to the engineer that a collision was imminent and jumped from the engine while the train was moving full tilt. The engineer was in the act of jumping also, but he noticed the light move suddenly and knew that instead of the headlight of an engine for which it was taken by the fireman, it was a very strong lantern. Fireman French was very badly bruised and had one ankle broken. He was taken to the hospital at Fosston, where he will be laid up for some time. It is possible he may have received internal injuries that will prove fatal. The lantern was carried by another employee of the road who was coming down the track.

No Small Pox Here.

Health Officer Grundy announces that there is not a case of small pox within the incorporated limits of the city of Thief River Falls at present. There were a number of cases here last fall, but the local authorities have taken so much caution that the disease has not spread.

If you have a farm for sale call on the Northern Real Estate & Mortgage Co. Office next First State Bank.

REGULAR TERM.

Of the Municipal Court Held Tuesday.

A regular term of the municipal court was held Tuesday but all the cases on the calendar were laid over to the next regular term to be held the first Tuesday in April. The following are the cases.

Nels Peterson vs. Ole Arneson. A suit for $132,50 as commission for the sale of a farm.

City of Thief River Falls vs. Mrs. Fred Wendt. A suit to recover $47, the amount paid for doctor bills, etc., for small pox cases in her family.

M. Stern vs. Dr. Cummerford. A suit to collect pay for building a stone foundation under the defendant's house, which work was not done in a satisfactory manner.

A. Buchanon vs. O. W. Nelson. A suit on a note.

Truely Stated.

A land boom of large proportions is expected to strike the Red river valley when the spring opening comes. Men in the east and south who are on the look-out for new locations or for opportunities to make profitable investments are casting their eyes hitherward and thousands of them will soon be flocking to this section for the purpose of seeing for themselves the land made famous by its production of the best wheat grown. While lands in the valley are still cheap, they are rapidly and steadily rising in value. Today they are being held at much higher figures than two or three years ago, and the next few years will see a still greater increase. If the people of the older settled communities contemplate purchasing Red river valley lands at no distant date, they will best serve their own interests by making their purchases at once.—Warren Register.

Suspended.

M. Olson, the city engineer and night watchman, was found in an intoxicated condition at the city hall Tuesday afternoon and suspended from service. John L. Durbin has been elected to fill the vacancy.

New Creamery Will Be Built in a Hurry.

The promoters of the creamery to be built here have decided upon the location on lots at the foot of Second street owned by Anna Kretzschmar, and the council Monday evening passed a resolution vacating part of the street thus giving the creamery company plenty of room. The new company also desires to secure electric power from 8 in the morning until 12, but owing to the absence of Leonard Peterson, who however is expected home in a few days no satisfactory answer could be given by the council.

Were Defeated.

The local bowling team which was down to Red Lake Falls Monday to play a match game with a team in that city was badly defeated. Very poor playing was done on both sides, the highest score being made by Harry Healey, of Red Lake Falls, and was only 168. The local team was composed of S. T. Johnson, Oliver Pederson, Ed Coenen and Olof Nyhus.

Driving 'Em Down Hard.

A crew of men commenced work last week driving piling for the Thief River Falls Lumber company. The piling this year is being driven down further than ever before, and it is the intention to have them planted so firmly in the bed of the river that the ice will not remove them next winter. The company has also built seven new piers this winter.

A Good Thing.

Alderman S. F. Staples, of the East Side, is endeavoring to have a sidewalk built on the north side of the bridge in Thief River Falls. This is a county bridge and accordingly a petition is being circulated addressed to the county commissioners asking that this improvement be made.

Possibly a Cancer.

Dr. N. M. Watson of Red Lake Falls has gone to Chicago to secure the best medical advice concerning his personal case. He tarried in St. Paul yesterday where he was joined by Dr. Dunlop who will accompany him to Chicago. Dr. Watson's friends hope that his condition is not so serious as to require an operation.—Crookston Journal.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

Mr. Jacobson Jumps on State Auditor Dunn.

St. Paul, March 1. — J. F. Jacobson declared war yesterday on State Auditor Dunn. In a speech bristling with sensational statements he attacked the record of the state auditor and opened a breach between the two old friends and co-workers that may never be healed. He declared that Mr. Dunn's success in office had been due to laws which the auditor himself had opposed. As a climax Mr. Jacobson declared that the influence of the auditor had been against the passage of the late tax code.

From the way Mr. Dunn discusses the subject it is evident that he does not shrink from the issue and that it will be carried into the pre-convention campaign. The attack was called forth by an interview published in a morning paper in which the state auditor argued against the tonnage tax feature of the Jacobson bill.

In the Senate.

Another constitutional amendment made its appearance in the senate yesterday morning. It is designed to facilitate the adoption of other amendments which may follow, and provides that only a majority of those voting upon an amendment shall be necessary for its adoption.

Eight new bills were introduced, most of them being sent direct to their proper committees without first going to the committee on reception of bills. Later the steering committee reported several bills for indefinite postponement, and in each case was turned down, the senators voting to receive the measures and refer them to other committees.

House Buries Tax Code by Refusing Reconsideration.

St. Paul, Feb. 27.—The tax code was killed Tuesday and was buried yesterday when, by a vote of 55 to 56 the house refused to reconsider the vote by which the measure was lost.

The vote on reconsideration was made with five members less present than the vote on which the bill was lost.

Immediately on the announcement of the death of the old code a flood of new tax bills was ready.

Mr. Jacobson submitted one embodying, in addition to the features of the defeated code as to street railways and other public service corporations, a 5-cent tonnage tax on ores.

The house passed the senate bill appropriating $25,000 for expenses in the legal fight against the Northern Securities company.

In the Senate.

Senator McGowan introduced a lengthy resolution, reciting that the house refused to pass a tax bill for the consideration of the senate, and, therefore, proposed the senate adjourn sine die. Lieut. Gov. L. A. Smith let the resolution be read, but stated it was out of order, basing his ruling on the constitutional provision that neither branch of the legislature can adjourn for over three days without consent of the other. Senator Daugherty gave notice of debate, and, under the rules, the resolution went over.

Several new bills were introduced.

Senate Stands by the Crookston Army Post Memorial.

St. Paul, Feb. 28.—Senator John H. Ives of St. Paul called for a vote on a reconsideration of the memorial to congress which asks for the establishment of a military post at Crookston. The motion to reconsider was defeated.

In the House.

The house passed the senate resolution correcting the kind of mocasin flower which is to be the state flower hereafter.

The house practically beat the Nyquist bill to defeat the 1901 dog tax law by substituting for it in committee of the whole the bill of Mr. Morley, which makes it optional with each county whether dogs shall be licensed or not.

The committee on reception of bills laid to rest a number of measures.

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Feb. 27.—State Treasurer Gilbertson and C. J. Thompson have filed a petition of intervention in bankruptcy proceedings against W. H. Minnesota Fighting Itself.

The Alexandria Post News speaks by the card when it says that the so-called merger fight is a fight of railroad vs. railroad, and there are a whole lots of people besides the editor of that paper who know the inside of the matter. The question is, why should the people of Minnesota be taxed to put up for the expenses? Why not let the interested parties fight it out and pay their own costs?—Sleepy Eye Dispatch.

GROWTH OF SCHOOLS.

How State's Educational Interest Has Progressed in Forty Years.

In 1860, when the population of the state was but 172,023, Minnesota had 25,336 pupils enrolled in its public schools. These pupils were taught by 724 teachers, and there were only 760 school houses in the state. The average wages of the teachers at that time was but $16.12.

Since the census of 1860 the state population has increased 1,000 per cent, the school enrollment 1,600 per cent, the number of teachers 1,700 per cent, the number of school houses 1,100 per cent and the wages of school teachers 245 per cent.

No state in the Union can show a better record than that for the same length of time.

In 1869 the permanent school fund of Minnesota was $938,795.86. Since then it has increased by over $12,000,000.

The statistics for the past forty years are as follows:

Year.	State Population.	School Enrollment.	No. Teachers.	Average Wages.	School Houses.	Permanent School Fund.
1860	172,023	25,335	724	$16 12	760	....
1865	250,099	50,564	2,003	21 00	1,524	$938,793 86
1870	439,706	110,590	4,111	30 25	2,119	2,476,222 19
1875	597,405	210,650	4,900	33 19	2,975	3,200,127 03
1880	780,773	216,948	5,903	31 65	3,778	4,449,727 79
1885	1,117,798	233,721	6,813	34 50	4,893	6,731,722 66
1890	1,301,826	280,960	8,847	38 54	5,864	8,955,920 46
1895	1,574,619	352,002	10,810	38 21	6,125	11,237,423 84
1900	1,751,394	399,207	12,059	39 63	7,628	12,546,689 30

The largest gain in enrollment was between 1870 and 1875, when the enrollment jumped 100,000 in five years.

At the end of the present school year the school population will be 420,000. At the present rate of growth it is believed to be entirely within reason to expect a school population of half a million at the close of 1905, which will mean a gain of 2,000 per cent in forty-five years, an average gain in school enrollment of 42 per cent every year.

At the present rate of increase in school teachers' wages Minnesota will, within the next two years, have as high an average school wage as any state in the Union.

SAVED BY HIS WATCH.

G. J. Efferts of Mora Meets With an Accident While Hunting.

Mora, Minn., Feb. 27. — But for the stout watch carried by G. J. Effertz, that young man of eighteen would now be awaiting burial instead of lying in a comfortable bed taking an enforced vacation from his ordinary duties. Effertz was out hunting and was standing on a log holding his gun by the muzzle, when it slipped and was discharged, the load penetrating his right thigh and wrist, inflicting serious but not fatal wounds, thanks to the watch in his waistcoat pocket. A CHICAGO STREET BECOMES CHARGED WITH FUGITIVE ELECTRICITY.

HORSES REAR UP AND FALL DEAD

EXCITING EXPERIENCES AND MANY AMUSING INCIDENTS FOLLOW.

PEDESTRIANS STEP LIVELY

MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN, IN A PANIC, FLEE WILDLY AWAY.

Chicago, March 1.—Two streets charged with electricity caused a panic on the West side, and five horses were killed, several others received serious shocks and in some instances wagons were damaged. Great excitement prevailed at West Twelfth and Canal streets, where an entire block seemed to be alive with electrical currents.

Water and mud proved a first-class conductor, dealing death to horses and causing many amusing incidents. The sidewalks were soaked by the rain, but the force of the electricity was not so great on the wooden walks as in the street. Sufficient current, however, was felt to cause some lively sprinting on the part of pedestrians.

It was very early in the morning that the state of affairs was first noticed, and it was nearly three hours before the current was shut off. Michael Murray, employed by the Moody & Waters Pie company, drove into Twelfth street from Canal. Suddenly the two horses reared, and falling on the pavement and dying instantly. Murray, who wore rubber boots, was puzzled, but spectators explained the cause and he made no attempt to touch the animals.

Crowds gathered, and not knowing the cause of the horses' death, they pushed forward toward the pie wagon. They had reached a certain point when they experienced the sensation of sharp-pointed needles pricking them. Men, women and children broke into a panic and ran screaming into Canal street. A boy with a longing for pies lingered as long as possible, executing grotesque steps. He finally abandoned his efforts to reach the pie wagon and dashed away

At Full Speed.

A Twelfth street car approached from the west. It was loaded with passengers and the floor and the platforms were wet. As the car passed through the block the passengers leaped from their seats and danced in such a lively manner that the car threatened to overturn.

Ald. Henry Fick of the Ninth ward came strolling down the street to the Maxwell street station. Suddenly the city father leaped up, and the speed he made for 200 yards or more broke records. Policeman Thomas Fahey, fat and heavy, arrived with drawn club. Fahey was just going to ask about things when he was seen to jump skyward. The officer dropped his club and tried to climb a trolley pole. It, too, was charged, and Fahey dropped to the sidewalk. He yelled something in Irish and he broke Fick's record by fully three seconds.

CARLETON LOSES.

Debate With Cornell Results in a Defeat.

Mount Vernon, Iowa, March 1.—Carleton college lost to Cornell in the intercollegiate debate held here last evening, the latter college receiving two of three votes of the judges.

The question discussed was that "United States Senators Should Be Elected by Direct Vote of the People." Carleton supported the affirmative. J. A. A. Burnquist, A. F. Crane and E. R. Edwards upheld the honor of the class. The Purple was supported by F. W. Edwards, J. E. Reike and E. B. Persons.

Mr. Crane gave the rebuttal for the affirmative and Edwards for the negative. Hon. Milton Remley of Iowa City, acted as presiding officer. The judges were: Dr. S. E. Sparling, University of Wisconsin; Prof. E. F. Schall, West Liberty, Iowa, and Prof. H. S. Richards, State University of Iowa.

This is Cornell's eleventh consecutive victory in debate. It was, however, conceded by the Cornell people that the Carleton team was the strongest.

In the Carleton-Cornell debate last year the latter institution also won. Cornell is the only institution which has ever defeated Carleton in debate.

WELCOME FOR ROOSEVELT.

It Is Assured by the Directors of the Charleston Exposition.

Charleston, S. C., March 1.—At the meeting of the board of directors of the exposition company last night Col. J. H. Tillman's message to President Roosevelt was fully discussed and resolutions unanimously adopted extending cordial greetings to the president and assuring him that they looked forward to his promised visit to the exposition with the greatest pleasure, and promised a warm welcome on behalf of the people. The resolutions also denied the board's responsibility for the recent communication of Lieut. Gov. Tillman.

PRINCESS IN COURT.

Alleged Forger Is Arraigned in Cape Colony.

Cape Town, March 1. — Princess Radziwill, who is charged with forging the name of Cecil Rhodes on three promissory notes, for 7,500 pounds to-day was arraigned in the police court here. The court adjourned to Mr. Rhodes' residence to take his evidence, he being ill and unable to appear in court. He denied signing the notes. His cross-examination was deferred.

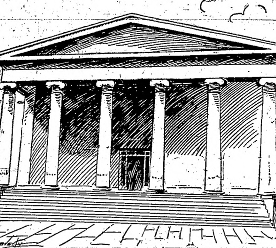
The case assumed a fresh aspect today by the princess entering suit against Mr. Rhodes for 2,000 pounds, on account of the alleged forged note for 2,000 pounds, said to have been indorsed by Mr. Rhodes, but which the latter repudiated.

MISSIONARIES IN DANGER.

Ten Thousand Chinese Soldiers Rebel in the Nanking District.

Pekin, March 1.—In response to a request for information from Mr. Conger, the American minister, the board of foreign affairs state that 10,000 soldiers have rebelled in the Nanking district, Province of Kiang-si, and they have been augmented by many recruits. The prefect of the district has telegraphed to the board of foreign affairs that many missionaries are traveling in the district and that they are in great danger.

Work of a Forgotten American Architect.



THE UNITED STATES CUSTOM HOUSE. PLANNED BY STRICKLAND FOR AND ORIGINALLY USED BY THE UNITED STATES BANK

Are all the works of Strickland, the first American architect, to be permitted to pass under the remodeling and original outline destroying hand of the modern improver?

The remodeling of the historic old Stock Exchange, at Third and Walnut streets; the abandoning of the old Mint building, at Juniper and Chestnut streets, and the immediate danger of its destruction, and the reported crumbling beneath the hand of time of the Custom House, once the home of the famous United States Bank, on Chestnut street, between Fourth and Fifth, makes the above question particularly pertinent and one to be seriously considered if the Quaker City would not lose all its Greek architecture.

There are but few of Strickland's works now remaining in a good state of preservation in Philadelphia, and one of these is now undergoing great changes, while others are menaced with immediate destruction.

Mr. Strickland's architecture is interesting in many respects, not only because it is perhaps the best example of Greek architecture to be found in the country, but also because he was the first American to demonstrate that it was not necessary for the New World to employ foreign-born talent to erect buildings of classic design.

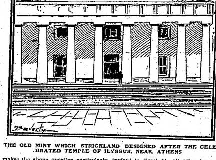
Mr. Strickland's most important work in Philadelphia was the design for the United States bank, now the Custom House, which is acknowledged by all lovers of Greek architecture today, after an existence of over fifty years, to be one of the handsomest and most classic buildings in the city.

This piece of Strickland's work resembles the Parthenon, although in general dimensions it is smaller than the latter building. There are eight fluted columns supporting the portico of the front entrance and the same number to the rear entrance of the Custom House, each twenty-seven feet high, by four feet six inches in diameter.

A curious fact is that Mr. Strickland not only designed the present Custom House, but also drew the plans for the first Federal building used for a custom house in Philadelphia. This building was opened on July 12, 1819. It was without architectural pretensions, but the business of the Philadelphia Custom House was carried on there until 1845, when the United States Bank failing, the federal government purchased its building, which has been used as a Custom House ever since.

When Mr. Strickland was employed to prepare a plan for the Mint building, he furnished a design for an edifice on the Ionic order, taken from the celebrated temple of Ilyssus, near Athens, having a portico sixty feet front, with six pillars, on the Ionic order, on the north and south front. This plan was accepted and the building erected accordingly.

In 1828, when the city councils of Philadelphia determined to restore Independence hall, Mr. Strickland was invited to direct his attention toward the preparation of plans for that purpose. The first plans which he prepared were not satisfactory to the councils and he was compelled to modify them. Colonial architecture was a branch of his profession to which he appears to have paid but little attention up to this time, but any one who has seen Independence Hall cannot but agree that the alterations which were made in it under the directions of Mr. Strickland follow out closely and harmonize well with the ideas of its colonial builders.



THE OLD MINT WHICH STRICKLAND DESIGNED AFTER THE CELEBRATED TEMPLE OF ILYSSUS, NEAR ATHENS

When the city of Philadelphia purchased 200 acres of land on the west of the Schuylkill river for the purpose of erecting thereon an almshouse for the city poor, Mr. Strickland was called upon for designs for the building. He planned four distinct structures, disposed at right angles with each other, and inclosing an interior space of 700 by 500 feet. The men's almshouse fronts the southeast. The main building contains a portico ninety feet in front, supported by eight columns, eight feet in diameter at the base and thirty feet in height, on the Tuscan order of architecture, built of brick and rough cast. The building is flanked by two wings, each 200 feet in length, the portico being elevated on a high flight of steps rising before the basement story to those of the upper story, and thus giving to this group of buildings a commanding appearance. The almshouse was first occupied about the year 1835.—Philadelphia Times.

More Mixed Metaphors.

To Lord Rosebery's famous "spade and wind" metaphor may be added two or three lapses, not all of which are mixed metaphors, perpetrated by Lord Londonderry. In 1896 Lord Londonderry threw the house of lords into roars of laughter during the debate on the second reading of the Irish land bill by gravely declaring that "This is the reason why you have failed to settle the Irish land question in the future as you have done in the past." In the course of the same speech he concluded a period with, "This is the keystone of the bill, are you going to kill it?" Better still was a sentence which he uttered in 1897, when speaking once more on the Irish land question. "That your lordship will see," referring to a quotation he had just made, "indorses up to the hilt what I have said."

HOW WILD ANIMALS SLEEP.

Different Species Have Varying Methods of Enjoying Slumber.

There is nothing odd or peculiar about the sleep of the lions and tigers. In captivity they show the same indifference to danger that they manifest in the jungle, and by day or night will slumber through an unusual tumult, unmindful or unconscious of the noise. Their sleep is commonly heavy and peaceful, says an exchange.

Bears are also heavy sleepers, but less disposed than lions and tigers to slumber in the daytime. Grizzly bears usually curl up under the rocks, but sometimes they crawl up to the very top of the rocks, and with front paws spread around the iron cage, bears go to sleep in what seems an uncomfortable position; but bears never release their muscular grasp of any object when asleep.

The black bears will curl up among the branches of a tree when they have the opportunity and go to sleep in this peculiar position. The polar bears show a peculiarity in the selection of their sleeping places. They choose one particular corner of the cage for the purpose and invariably seek this out for the night's rest.

The high-strung, nervous animals are the most interesting to watch at night. They usually belong to the hunted tribes, whose lives are in constant danger in the forest, and they possess such a highly developed nervous system that they really sleep with one eye open. The slightest noise will instantly awaken them.

The prairie wolves merely seem to close their eyes for an instant and then open them again to see if all is quiet.

HOW A ROOSEVELT DIED.

Interesting Letter of 1812 Found at Hinckley, Ill.

An interesting relic of the war of 1812 is in the possession of Albert S. Van Aelstyne of Hinckley, Ill. It is a letter that tells of the tragic death of Lieut. Thomas Wilton Roosevelt in an engagement with the British and Indians at Fort Erie, N. Y., September 6, 1814. Lieut. Roosevelt was an ancestor of the president of the United States. He was the father of Mr. Van Aelstyne's mother, who was Sherizada Roosevelt, born at Junius, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1803, and died at Marengo, Ill., April 23, 1898. The letter is as follows:

"Madam—I am sorry to inform you of the death of your husband and our officer, which we all very much lament. On the 5th of September our picket guards were attacked by a considerable force of British and Indians, and we, the volunteers, were immediately ordered out by Col. Wilcox, who then took command, and after a smart skirmish of half an hour, Lieut. Roosevelt was shot in the right breast and expired in a few moments. I brought him into this fort, and on the 6th inst. he was taken across the river to Buffalo and buried in a decent and officer-like manner. Col. Wilcox fell in the same action and was carried to Buffalo and buried in the same manner. I shall endeavor to take care of his effects here and see that they are safely conveyed home to you. I am your, with respect, (Signed) "George Alfred.

"Fort Erie, N. Y., Sept. 6, 1814."

KILLED REPUBLICAN MAJORITY.

Good Story of the Early Days of the Glorious West.

In early days out West the administration of justice was not, perhaps, all it should have been. When the Northern Pacific Railroad was in course of construction Samuel Gustine Thompson, the eminent corporation lawyer, went as far as the railroad would take him, in the early days when Jay Cooke was building the Northern Pacific. When he returned he called on Mr. Cooke at his office in Philadelphia. Mr. Cooke asked him to tell him something about the country. "Can it be possible," Mr. Thompson asked him, "that you are putting all your money into a country you have never seen?" Continuing, Mr. Thompson said: "He said it was. I told him this incident: In one of the sparsely settled districts a man convicted of murder was called up before the judge for sentence. The judge angrily began by saying, 'John Smith, when I ran for office in this district there were seven qualified voters here. Four were Republicans and three were Democrats. I was a Republican candidate and elected by a majority of 1. You have killed that majority, and it is the sentence of the court'—

"'Hold on, judge,' said the culprit, 'I reckon we can fix that. If you will let me go I'll vote the Republican ticket next election.'

"'Sentence suspended,' said the judge, 'but if I'm not re-elected, may God have mercy on your soul.'"

Cat and Rat Good Friends.

That the lion and lamb shall lie down together was prophesied a long time ago, but quite as wonderful is the friendship between a cat and a rat which has developed in a Mulberry Bend saloon. The rat, which is of the white variety that some persons fancy for pets, makes its home under the bar. Back of this is a shelf, on which the proprietor places nuts and other dainties. The rat spends much of his time carrying these things down to his nest on the floor.

The cat used to be known as a particularly fine "ratter" and roams about at will. It often goes to sleep on a shelf behind the bar, and the rat crawls in between its front paws, and cuddling down like a tiny kitten also takes a nap. The cat has never offered to harm the rat, and even seems to take pride in keeping the white rodent clean. Several times a day the cat makes the rat's toilet, licking its fur until it fairly shines.

Made Well and Strong by Pe-ru-na.

Mrs. Schafer, 436 Pope Ave., St. Louis, Mo., writes:

"In the early part of last year I wrote to you for advice for my daughter Alice, four years of age.

"She has been a puny, sickly, ailing child since her birth. She had convulsions and catarrhal fever. I was always doctoring until we commenced to use Peruna. She grew strong and well. Peruna is a wonderful tonic; the best medicine I have ever used."—Mrs. Schafer.

Mrs. C. E. Long, the mother of little Mina Long, writes from Atwood, Colo., as follows:

"We can never thank you enough for the change you have made in our little one's health. Before she began taking your Peruna she suffered everything in the way of cough, colds and croup, but now she has taken not quite a bottle of Peruna, and is well and strong as she has ever been in her life. She has not had the croup once since she began taking Peruna, and when she has a little cold a few doses of Peruna fixes her out all right. We can never praise it enough."—Mrs. C. E. Long.

Mrs. G. W. Heard, of Howth, Texas, writes to Dr. Hartman in regard to her baby girl, Ruth:

"My little girl had some derangement of the Bowels. She was a mere skeleton and we did not think she would ever get well. After giving her less than one bottle of Peruna she was sound and well. Now she has a good appetite and is a picture of health."

Mrs. Heard also writes in regard to her son, Carl:

"My son's ears had been affected since he was a babe only a few months old. The last year I thought he had almost lost his hearing and had a local physician treating him for about six weeks. Finally I began giving him your remedy, and after he had taken two bottles he was entirely cured. I cannot praise Peruna enough."—Mrs. G. W. Heard.

If you do not receive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

A Doctor's Little Daughter Cured of Grip by Pe-ru-na.

Dr. R. Robbins, Physician and Surgeon of Muskogee, Indian Ter., writes:

"I have been a practicing physician for a good many years and was always slow to take hold of patent medicines, but this winter my little girl and myself were taken with the grip. I was so bad I was not able to sit up. I sent for a doctor, but he did me no good.

"Finally I sent and got a bottle of Peruna and commenced to take it. I took two bottles and my cough was gone and my lungs loosened up and my head became clear. My little girl took the same way.

"It looked as though she would die, she was so sick. I gave her medicine, but it seemed to do her little good, so I sent and got one more bottle of Peruna and commenced to give it to her. It was only a short time until she was getting along all right, so I give your medicine, Peruna, the praise for what it did for me and my dear little daughter."—Dr. R. Robbins.

ALL UNDER WATER

GREAT DAMAGE CAUSED BY THE SWOLLEN STREAMS IN THE EAST.

PATERSON, N. J., OVERWHELMED

FLOOD TRIES TO FINISH WORK OF DESTRUCTION LEFT UNDONE BY FIRE.

THOUSANDS ARE HOMELESS

MANY BRIDGES WASHED AWAY AND RAILWAY TRAFFIC IS SUSPENDED.

Paterson, N. J., March 4.—This city, so recently swept by fire, is now overwhelmed by flood. Three weeks ago the greater part of its business section was burned out and yesterday the quarter occupied by the houses of the poorer class is inundated. Hundreds of families have been made homeless by the overflow of the Passaic river and the country for miles around the city is under water. So far but one death has been reported. The great peril now is that the Spruce street roadway may overflow, in which event a great loss of property in the manufacturing district is sure to ensue.

The fire of three weeks ago, while causing a damage to property to an extent of nearly $8,000,000, did not create such suffering and widespread desolation as the flood. The district for a mile along the river front, from Spruce street hill to Straight street, and two blocks north and five blocks south of the river, nearly half a mile in width, is covered with water which in many instances reached the second story of the dwellings. In this district are situated the Rogers locomotive works and several silk mills and dye works. In the immediate vicinity of them fully 600 families have been Driven From Their Tenements.

Of these unfortunates several hundred were taken from their homes in boats and barges amid scenes of much excitement. In the absence of Mayor John Hinchcliffe, who is now in Cuba recuperating from the strain of the recent fire, Thomas J. Bergan, president of the board of aldermen, is acting mayor, and, with the mayor's secretary, William M. Dill, is doing his utmost to relieve all those who need assistance. In the work of rescue one of the most earnest toilers lost his life. The cry of fire was heard about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and it looked as if the elements were combining to destroy the city. There was a brisk wind blowing, but the blaze was soon controlled.

On Hamilton avenue near the river the foundations of two new buildings were undermined by the flood and the structures collapsed and were swept away in the stream. The Arch street bridge collapsed in the afternoon. All the other bridges are completely submerged, cutting off communication between the two sections of the city. The boilers and engine rooms of several of the big mills are ten feet under water.

WILKESBARRE UNDER WATER.

Damage Already Done Is Estimated at Over $1,000,000.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., March 4.—A heavy rainfall and rush of water from its upper tributaries caused the North Branch of the Susquehanna river to rise rapidly yesterday. The high water mark is equal to that of 1865, which has always been known as a record-breaker. The damage to property is already estimated at $1,000,000. The water is over the banks of the river from Pittsburg to Nanticoke and resembles a vast lake. Nearly one-half of the city is under water. At Westmoor, Firewood and Riverside nearly all residents vacated their houses. The water had reached the first stories and was gradually going up to the second. Those who lingered too long had to be removed in boats. Two hundred families living in the lowlands in the town of Plymouth had to leave their houses hastily in the afternoon. At Nanticoke several houses were swept away by the rushing waters and the people living in them had a narrow escape. Several washouts are reported along the line of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. Reports from the mines show that many of them were flooded and it will take some days before they can be pumped out. This will curtail the output of coal. Nine lives have been lost so far. The casualties for the past twenty-four hours were three.

Many Industries Paralyzed.

Philadelphia, March 4.—The Schuylkill river is again within its banks and getting to its normal condition. The destruction wrought by the storm was so great that many industrial establishments along the river banks will be unable to resume work for several days. Quite a number of buildings used for manufacturing purposes had their foundations weakened and machinery clogged with mud. All reports from up-river points carry the information that great damage was done. The various towns, now that the water has receded, are rapidly recovering their normal condition.

Worst Flood in Many Years.

Wheeling, W. Va., March 4.—Wheeling is in the grasp of the worst flood it has experienced since 1884 with but one exception. In Wheeling, Bellaire, Benwood, Martin's Ferry and Bridgeport scores of factories have been entered by the raging waters, fires extinguished and 20,000 men placed on the list of involuntary idleness that will continue until to-night or to-morrow morning. Wheeling island is two-thirds covered by water and fully 700 families are occupying the upper floors of their homes. South Wheeling and Benwood were hit fully as hard.

Pittsburg Is Recovering.

Pittsburg, March 4. — This city and Allegheny have so far recovered from the flood as to have resumed all ordinary traffic and to have in a great measure overcome the inconvenience brought about by the high waters. The only portions of either city still under water are the lower parts of Penn avenue in Pittsburg and the Wood Run district in Allegheny. Both of these sections will be out of the water's clutch in a few hours, as the rivers are steadily falling here and at all points above. An estimate of the damage done here by the flood is hard to get at, but conservative men place the total at about $1,250,000. This includes the loss to thousands of workmen in wages as well as the actual property loss.

Almost Wiped Out.

Fort Plain, N. Y., March 4. — The hamlet of Sprakers, six miles east of here, has been almost wiped out by the combined forces of water and fire. Sprakers is made up of fifty families and has been under water for two days. Great masses of ice came down the river and struck the houses, some of which were so shaken that stoves were overturned and the dwellings were burned.

Much Damage at Harrisburg.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 4.—The second and third piers of the famous old camel-back bridge on the Harrisburg side were washed away by high water early yesterday morning. Much damage has been done by the high water in and about Harrisburg.

The Ohio Raging.

Cincinnati, March 4. — Reports from the Upper Ohio valley show the river rising from Wheeling to Ripley and above the danger line at all intermediate points.

MARCONI AGAIN SPANS OCEAN.

Marconi Maintains Constant Communication With Home Station While on Ocean.

New York, March 4. — Skeptics who doubted the truth of Marconi's recent statement that he had succeeded in dispatching messages between Newfoundland and his Cornwall station were furnished Saturday with proofs of a still more marvelous achievement on the part of the versatile Italian electrician, who arrived from Southampton on the Philadelphia. He announced, and his testimony was corroborated by that of the captain of the vessel, that he had been in communication with the Podhue station for almost the entire distance across the ocean. Day after day on the voyage the inventor sat at his post on the steamer and kept up an uninterrupted succession of messages with the home station. For 2,000 miles not the slightest difficulty was experienced, but after that the connection was not perfect.

FARGO HAS QUITE A FIRE.

Offices and Warehouses of the J. I. Case Company Are Totally Destroyed.

Fargo, N. D., March 4.—Fire yesterday destroyed the big J. I. Case offices and warehouses here, and entailed a loss of $75,000. The flames are supposed to have started in the boiler room and to have burned slowly for several hours before they were discovered. In addition to the building, which was valued at something like $20,000, there were twenty complete threshing rigs stored there, some old machines were in the basement for remodeling, and there was an extra large stock of repairs on hand, as this office was used as the repair distributing point of the entire Northwest.

FIGHT WITH BURGLARS.

Chief of Police Badly Wounded and One Burglar Receives Fatal Injuries.

Mattoon, Ill., March 4. — In a fight between burglars and officers here early yesterday morning Chief of Police Lyons received wounds that may cause the loss of an arm by amputation and two or three youths whom the police were attempting to capture, were wounded, one of them fatally. The police were advised that an attempt would be made to rob the bank, stationed three men in the building, and when the youths entered through a rear window the police attempted to capture them.

KING LEOPOLD IN BAD HEALTH.

Condition Causes Anxiety, But Physicians Deny Symptoms Are Serious.

Brussels, March 4.—The condition of King Leopold, who has been ill since his return here from the Riviera, is causing anxiety. The physicians in attendance on his majesty deny that his symptoms are serious, but the frequency of their visits has given rise to disquieting rumors.

English Language Must Be Spoken by Would-Be Citizens.

Fargo, N. D., March 4.—The action of Judge Owen of Devils Lake in refusing naturalization papers to an applicant who was unable to speak the English language after a six-year residence in the state seems to be generally indorsed by the press. The judge is stalwart in his Americanism and wants the men who are given citizenship to be able to appreciate the honor.

FIVE CRUSHED TO DEATH.

Many Are Injured in Collapse of Cleveland Factory.

Cleveland, Ohio, March 4.—The fourth floor of the Cleveland Baking company's plant on Central avenue fell under the weight of a large number of barrels of flour, crushing through the three under floors, into the basement. Five persons are missing, four girls and a man. They are buried beneath the mass of debris in the basement and are undoubtedly dead.

HENRY IS PLEASED

WARMLY GREETED ON HIS JOURNEY THROUGH THE SOUTH AND WEST.

VISITS HISTORIC BATTLEFIELDS

HEARS AFRESH STORIES OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN NORTH AND SOUTH.

NEGRO MELODIES TICKLE HIM

CROWDS THRONG EVERY STATION AND GREET HIM WITH CHEERS.

Indianapolis, March 4.—Prince Henry of Prussia went up Lookout mountain yesterday, and after viewing the ground where the Union and Confederate armies met in conflict and hearing a fresh story of the battle, resumed his journey to the North and West. Leaving Chattanooga over the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis railroad, his train ran through a corner of Alabama, and then turning to the north, hurried across Tennessee, with a short stop at Nashville, through Kentucky, with brief stays at Louisville and Bowling Green, and up into Indiana to another brief halt at Indianapolis. At Indianapolis the course was changed to the westward again, and on the tracks of the Vandalia line his train went on toward St. Louis. His reception in the South was hospitable and demonstrative. The negroes manifested great curiosity to see the prince, and they interested and amused him. He got an opportunity to hear them sing at Nashville and at the experience. It was the Glee club of Fisk university that sang, and at the close he asked the young woman who led them to come into his car. He took her hand and congratulated her. There was a great crowd at Chattanooga, and the people presented the prince with a handsome souvenir of his visit. Nashville also made a demonstration of friendliness, as did Louisville and Indianapolis. At every station along the route the people gathered to salute him with cheers. There was much enthusiasm over Admiral Evans as well, and at several points after they had seen and cheered the prince the people called for the admiral. Brief though it was, Prince Henry was delighted with his Southern tour and as he was leaving Nashville, said: "The people have been very kind to me. Everywhere they have received me in the kindliest manner, and I very deeply appreciate it. I wish they might all know how thankful I am."

Was Greatly Pleased

FILLED HIM WITH LEAD.

A Drunken Man Uses a Shotgun With Effect.

Mattoon, Ill., March 4. — A serious shooting affray last evening occurred at Charleston, ten miles east of here, in which Frank and Thomas Houchin, brothers, were shot by Jack White, brother-in-law of Thomas Houchin.

White did his work with a double-barreled shotgun and eighty-three shot landed in Frank Houchin's arm and side at a distance of six feet. He may die. Thomas Houchin received only part of the charge. He will recover. Anthony Houchin, another brother, just moved away from the muzzle of the weapon as White pulled the triggers. Domestic difficulties were the cause.

White was intoxicated. He alleged that Thomas Houchin had abused his sister, Houchin's wife. The men met in George Crim's saloon early in the evening and there was a row in which brickbats and beer bottles figured. White sent home and secured his shotgun. Next he called at Houchin's residence and made such a disturbance that the police were sent for. He eluded them and reached Crim's saloon, where Thomas, Frank and Anthony Houchin were conversing. They saw him coming and bolted the door. White ran to a window, thrust his weapon through and fired both barrels. Several hours later he was arrested and lodged in jail. Frank Houchin is an industrious and respected young man.

REBELLION IS GRAVE.

United States Calls on China to Protect Foreigners.

Pekin, March 4.—The Chinese foreign office now admits that the rebellion in the vicinity of Nan-ning, a province of Quang See, seventy miles north of the Gulf of Tonquin, is very grave, though this was denied yesterday. Over 1,000 former soldiers are engaged in pillaging. An edict has been issued commanding the Chinese authorities to afford protection to the missionaries and other foreigners. Mr. Conger, the United States minister, has notified Prince Ching, head of the foreign office, that he expects China will speedily suppress the rebellion and protect the foreigners in that part of the country.

TWO BUILDINGS COLLAPSE.

Terrific Explosion Causes Death of Three Persons.

Reading, Pa., March 4.—A terrible explosion occurred last night in the four-story music store of C. H. Lichty. The building at once completely collapsed. This was followed by the three-story brick umbrella factory adjoining of Mrs. Mary Roland. Both buildings and contents were destroyed. A number of persons were in the building but they were all accounted for except Mrs. Roland and a friend who called to spend the evening, and the watchman in the Lichty building. It is believed these three persons perished. The explosion is said to have been due to a gas which was manufactured by a local company.

CENSURED BY THE SENATE.

Tillman and McLaurin Incident Is Probably Closed.

Washington, March 1.—Senators McLaurin and Tillman of South Carolina yesterday were severely censured by the United States senate for the sensational personal encounter between the two senators on the floor of the senate last Saturday. The adoption of the resolution of censure probably closes the incident so far as Mr. McLaurin or the senate is concerned.

Immediately after the senate convened Mr. Burrows, chairman of the committee on privileges and elections, reported the resolution of censure framed by a majority of the committee. Practically there was no debate on the resolution, although Mr. Gallinger and Mr. Platt (Conn.) made it evident by brief statements that the resolution was not quite satisfactory to them. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 54 to 12. When Mr. Tillman's name was called a new sensation to the proceedings was added by his rising and saying with ill-concealed emotion: "Among gentlemen an apology for an offense committed under heat of blood is usually considered sufficient."

The auditors caught their breath as Mr. Tillman thus entered his protest against the adoption of the resolution.

The senate adopted the conference report on the permanent census bill and then began consideration of the irrigation measure.

In the House.

The house yesterday broke all its records in the matter of private pension legislation, clearing the calendar and passing 160 bills in a little over three hours. The conference report on the census bill was adopted and the house adjourned until Monday.

LIVELY FOR THE PRINCE.

Fitting Culmination to His Visit to the National Capital.

Washington, March 2.—Prince Henry's visit to the national capital had a fitting culmination last night in a splendid official dinner given at the German embassy and later a tremendous outburst of popular enthusiasm from the German residents of Washington, as the imperial visitor was about to start for his Southern and Western tour. The dinner was given at the embassy at 8 o'clock, his royal highness being the guest of honor, while those invited to meet him were representative of the highest official and diplomatic society.

During the afternoon Prince Henry enjoyed one event not on his official itinerary when he and President Roosevelt went in a rainstorm on a horseback ride of an hour and a quarter through Rock creek valley and the suburbs in the northwestern section of the city. The ride was arranged personally between them during one of their talks at an official function. The ride was through the northwestern suburbs and rain fell a large part of the time, but both riders seemed to enjoy the outing.

NEW LINE TO THE COAST.

Northern Pacific and Great Northern Will Tap a New Country.

Chicago, March 2. — The Northern Pacific and Great Northern interests have closed a deal for a new through line to the Pacific coast. English and American capitalists, headed by Lord Thurlow and George H. Proctor of New York, will build an 800-mile road from Eureka, Cal., to Weiser, Idaho. From their main lines the Great Northern-Northern Pacific interests will build to Weiser from the north. An entirely new country, rich in forests, agriculture and cattle ranches, will be tapped. It will give the merger interests control of the finest harbor on the Pacific coast not already occupied by railroads. It will be a winter route over which much of the Oriental traffic can be sent when heavy traffic makes the more northerly lines too difficult to operate to their full capacity. The deal by which the two interests were brought into conjunction was effected Wednesday in New York. Lord Thurlow, who was in Chicago at the Auditorium hotel for several hours yesterday, announced the success of the transaction. The plan will involve an outlay of $25,000,000.

CAUSED A PANIC

A CHICAGO STREET BECOMES CHARGED WITH FUGITIVE ELECTRICITY.

HORSES REAR UP AND FALL DEAD

EXCITING EXPERIENCES AND MANY AMUSING INCIDENTS FOLLOW.

PEDESTRIANS STEP LIVELY

MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN, IN A PANIC, FLEE WILDLY AWAY.

Chicago, March 1.—Two streets charged with electricity caused a panic on the West side, and five horses were killed, several others received serious shocks and in some instances wagons were damaged. Great excitement prevailed at West Twelfth and Canal streets, where an entire block seemed to be alive with electrical currents.

Water and mud proved a first-class conductor, dealing death to horses and causing many amusing incidents. The sidewalks were soaked by the rain, but the force of the electricity was not so great on the wooden walks as in the street. Sufficient current, however, was felt to cause some lively sprinting on the part of pedestrians.

It was very early in the morning that the state of affairs was first noticed, and it was nearly three hours before the current was shut off. Michael Murray, employed by the Moody & Waters Pie company, drove into Twelfth street from Canal. Suddenly the two horses reared, and falling on the pavement and dying instantly. Murray, who wore rubber boots, was puzzled, but spectators explained the cause and he made no attempt to touch the animals.

Crowds gathered, and not knowing the cause of the horses' death, they pushed forward toward the pie wagon. They had reached a certain point when they experienced the sensation of sharp-pointed needles pricking them. Men, women and children broke into a panic and ran screaming into Canal street. A boy with a longing for pies lingered as long as possible, executing grotesque steps. He finally abandoned his efforts to reach the pie wagon and dashed away

At Full Speed.

A Twelfth street car approached from the west. It was loaded with passengers and the floor and the platforms were wet. As the car passed through the block the passengers leaped from their seats and danced in such a lively manner that the car threatened to overturn.

Ald. Henry Fick of the Ninth ward came strolling down the street to the Maxwell street station. Suddenly the city father leaped up, and the speed he made for 200 yards or more broke records. Policeman Thomas Fahey, fat and heavy, arrived with drawn club. Fahey was just going to ask about things when he was seen to jump skyward. The officer dropped his club and tried to climb a trolley pole. It, too, was charged, and Fahey dropped to the sidewalk. He yelled something in Irish and he broke Fick's record by fully three seconds.

BIG LOSS TO BOERS

SIX HUNDRED MEN KILLED OR CAPTURED BY BRITISH FORCES.

ANNIVERSARY OF MAJUBA HILL

KITCHENER TELLS STORY OF A SUCCESSFUL TWO-DAYS BATTLE.

BRITISH VERY MUCH TICKLED

WAR SECRETARY READS THE NEWS TO THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

London, March 2. — Following the precedent of Lord Roberts, who announced Gen. Cronje's surrender at Paardeburg on the anniversary of the battle of Majuba Hill (Feb. 27, 1881), Lord Kitchener apparently selected the same anniversary to achieve a big success, by a combined movement lasting two days, against the Boer forces within the Harrismith and Van Reenen line of blockhouses. The Boer losses aggregate 600 men killed or captured and 2,000 horses and 28,000 head of cattle fell into the hands of the British troops.

This news was so welcome to the British that it was read out in the house of commons yesterday by the war secretary, Mr. Brodrick, from a dispatch of Lord Kitchener, as follows:

"Harrismith, Feb. 28.—Yesterday the combined operations of the columns terminated in driving the Boers against the Harrismith and Van Reenen blockhouse line. The River Wilge was held by the Leinster regiment and Elliott's mounted infantry from Harrismith with the columns formed on the Frankfort and Botha's Pass blockhouse line and advanced south,

Holding the Entire Country between the Wilge and the Natal frontier. On the first night a very severe attempt to break through was made at a point between Rimington's and Byng's columns, and the New Zealanders behaved with great gallantry. The fighting was at close quarters and the Boers, as usual, drove a large herd of cattle in front of them. Manie Botha, the Boer leader, was killed and thirty-five dead Boers were found on the ground. Over 100 horses were killed and 6,000 head of cattle were left in our hands. Other small attempts to break out were made and in two cases succeeded. On the last day 450 Boers with rifles and horses were captured. All the columns have not yet reported and the operations have been very wide, but over 600 Boers have been either killed or are prisoners in our hands; also 2,000 horses, 28,000 head of cattle, 200 wagons, 60,000 sheep, 600 rifles and 50,000 rounds of ammunition. The prisoners include Gen. Dewet's son and his secretary; Commandants Meyer and Truther, and several field cornets. These satisfactory results are very appropriate on the anniversary of Majuba."

ENDS IN TRAGEDY

MAD INFATUATION OF A MARRIED MAN FOR A WOMAN OTHER THAN HIS WIFE.

KILLS HIMSELF AND THE WOMAN

ANGERED BECAUSE HIS PARAMOUR WENT OUT WITH ANOTHER MAN.

REFUSED TO OBEY HIS ORDERS

FIVE SHOTS STARTLE INMATES OF HOUSE AND BOTH ARE FOUND DEAD.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 1.—The mad infatuation of a married man for a woman other than his wife which had been on for several months, ended at 11 o'clock yesterday morning in a house at 803 Watson street, when William A. Rinard, a steel blower at the Edgar Thomson works, and one of the best known men in Braddock, shot and killed Margaret Lambert, or Wilbert, formerly of London, Eng. A second or so later Rinard placed the revolver to his own head and breast and killed himself. It all happened in the space of two minutes, although the circumstances which led to it cover a period of months. The Lambert woman's right name was Mrs. Andrew P. Wilbert. Her maiden name was Lambert. Some years ago she was married to A. P. Wilbert, a bartender at the Hoffman house. Three years ago they separated.

Rinard was the son of a prominent real estate and insurance man of Braddock. Last Christmas he met the Wilbert woman and became infatuated. His wife is a member of a well known family in Braddock.

Wednesday night two traveling men called at the house where Mrs. Wilbert lived and a little while later drove away with two women. As they left Rinard warned Mrs. Wilbert that if she did not return at once he would shoot her. She refused to obey him. When they returned yesterday morning Rinard called Mrs. Wilbert to the parlor and almost immediately afterward five shots were heard by the inmates of the house. The woman was found lying in the center of the room with a bullet wound in her head and one under her heart. Rinard was near the fireplace with a large ragged hole through his head. Both are dead.

Stone and Mme. Tsilka, holding Turkey responsible, inasmuch as the capture of the missionaries was effected on Turkish soil. This question of responsibility may have serious developments, since Turkey emphatically disclaims responsibility and lays the blame on Bulgaria.

TRIBUTE TO WASHINGTON.

Prince Henry Places Two Wreaths on First President's Tomb.

Washington, March 1.—Prince Henry of Prussia journeyed to Mount Vernon yesterday afternoon and placed two wreaths on the tomb of Washington. He approached the grave of the first president with bared head, and that there might be nothing irreverent in the ceremony, asked the holders of a dozen cameras who stood around to refrain from photographing him. Two large wreaths made at Washington by his order already had been sent to the tomb, and taking them up he formally sat them in place. Fifty feet down the sward that falls away from the tomb Prince Henry planted a linden tree. He spent a few minutes in looking at the Washington relics, then departed for Washington.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

Jacobson Tax Bill Warmly Received in the Senate.

St. Paul, March 3. — The Jacobson tax bill, which passed the house Friday got a stormy reception in the senate Saturday and precipitated a debate that developed a large body of hostilities. The attack on the measure was made from several directions—upon its constitutionality, its scope and upon several of its most important provisions. After a long fight the bill was sent to the taxes and tax laws committee. A common understanding was first reached that hearings and committee examination of the measure must be concluded speedily and that the bill be reported Wednesday.

Stockwell's resolution calling upon the president to put a stop to the shipment of horses and mules from the United States to South Africa passed by a vote of 36 to 5.

In the House.

The house Saturday, with barely enough members on the floor to pass bills, received a dozen unimportant measures, passed nearly as many more, agreed upon a special order on the Anderson bills for Monday afternoon and adjourned.

The interest of the house lay in the fate of the Jacobson bill over in the senate, where the lords of the upper house were becoming involved in a preliminary struggle with the measure, which the house shinned through with*out an amendment. Those members directly* interested in bills before the house managed to keep within voting distance a bare majority, and the bills passed went through in a majority of cases practically by default.

BOERS ARRESTED

ATTACK UPON THE BRITISH MULE DEPOT AT NEW ORLEANS FEARED.

AGENTS WARNED TO KEEP AWAY

SECRETARY HAY WRITES TO THE AUTHORITIES ABOUT THE MATTER.

STRONG LETTER TO ROOSEVELT

BOER AGENT PROTESTS AGAINST ALLEGED LENIENCY SHOWN BRITISH.

New Orleans, March 4.—It developed here yesterday that Secretary of State Hay had written to Mayor Capdeville and Gov. Heard expressing the fear that the Boer representatives and sympathizers in New Orleans might attack the British horse and mule quarters at Port Chalmette, just below the city, where the mules and horses are kept awaiting shipment to the British army in South Africa.

Gen. Pearson, the Boer agent at New Orleans, after the failure of his suit in the United States court to break up the mule shipment business, wrote a personal letter to President Roosevelt on the subject, in which he protested against the British being allowed to use the United States as the base

For Their War Supplies.

The letter was so emphatic in denouncing the mule depot at Port Chalmette as to fill Secretary Hay with the belief that Gen. Pearson intended to organize a force to attack the depot. He accordingly wrote to Mayor Capdeville, expressing his apprehension and asking him to assure the British officers that the mule depot was within the limits in St. Bernard parish, where Mayor Capdeville is wholly without power or authority. The mayor, accordingly referred the communication to Gov. Heard, and he sent it to Sheriff Nunez of St. Bernard. The latter has announced his intention to allow no fights or other trouble in his parish growing out of the Boer-British difficulty, although he thought the secretary of state unnecessarily alarmed. As a precaution, however, he arrested two Boer agents who were found in the neighborhood of the mule depot, and they were warned to keep away from there.

DR. BURNETT IS GUILTY.

Jury Recommends a Sentence of Fifteen Years.

Michel of Nashville, Tenn., returned a verdict of guilty and recommended that Burnett be sent to the penitentiary for fifteen years. Burnett's attorneys will ask for a new trial. The verdict was a surprise, as Judge Baker's instructions to the jury were considered favorable to the defendant. The case was one of the most unusual that has ever been tried in the Cook county criminal court. Burnett, who is a young dentist, was charged with being accessory before and after the fact of the death of Mrs. Nichol, even though it was admitted by the prosecution that Mrs. Nichol had committed suicide. The state endeavored to establish the point that Burnett and Mrs. Nichol agreed to commit suicide together, and that the man weakened, allowing the woman to go to her death alone. The defense disputed that there had been any agreement between the two to end their lives together, and asserted that Mrs. Nichol had taken her own life while Burnett was lying intoxicated at her side.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XIX.

The Appointed Time.

Mr. George Reeks arrived in Little Pond street, Camden Town, late on the previous evening, and filled with very mixed emotions. Murder was in his heart against the broker who had dared to be smitten with the charms of Mrs. Reeks; fear was in his heart, because he was going to do a disgraceful thing, and conscience stabbed at him. He had made a promise not to give up the papers; in desperation at the difficult position in which he found himself, he had firmly resolved to sell these papers at the price offered. Yet, as he turned into Little Pond street, his heart was heavy within him, although he tried to cheer himself with sophistries.

"After all, what does it matter?" he asked himself, as he stood in the dark street near the house. "Gilbert Rickerby is nothing to me, nothing more than a lodger; Mrs. Reeks is a great deal to me—everything, in fact. Oh, yes, I know"—he spoke as though he were answering some uneasy voice within him—"I know that Mr. Rickerby is in hiding and in trouble, and has got to fight for the girl he loves! What's the use of reminding me about that, I should like to know! I'm in trouble; I've got a girl (at least, not quite a girl; but that doesn't matter) dependent on me. And think of £500!"

He walked up to the house and put his key in the lock; entered softly and closed the door behind him. He turned at once into the little sitting room and stood in the presence of Mrs. Reeks. That lady started to her feet with a faint scream, and came towards him. Mr. Reeks, with much dignity, waved her off.

"Stop!" he exclaimed. "Tell me—tell me the worst; I can bear it, whatever it is."

Mrs. Reeks smiled—a little foolishly, perhaps. "Well, George," she began. "I didn't mean to upset you, I'm sure. The broker's man is here—in the back kitchen, at the present moment, asleep. There isn't anything remarkable in that, is there? Goodness knows we've had the brokers in times enough, haven't we? And as for the telegram—"

"Woman, you are concealing something from me; I know it!" cried Mr. Reeks, advancing sternly toward her. "Brokers may come and brokers may go; I am used to 'em. But there is something more than mere brokers here. What has this man—if one may call a broker a man—what has he dared to say?"

Mrs. Reeks looked at her husband a moment and scented danger. Truth to tell, she had merely desired to get him home as rapidly as possible, being very averse to his chasing about the country with strange young ladies and on strange errands; and she had thought that the suggestion in regard to the broker's man might be efficacious in bringing him home. Perceiving that she had put matters a little too strongly, she thought it wise, under the circumstances, to seek refuge in tears; accordingly, she sank gracefully into a chair and covered her face with her handkerchief.

"I'm sure I never thought you'd take it in this fashion, George," she sobbed. "It wasn't the man who is now—now in the kitchen; it was his master."

"Never mind who it was—I want to know what he said!" cried Mr. Reeks, furiously.

"He said—said that it was a pleasure—pleasure to leave a man in the house of such a—such a fine woman," sobbed Mrs. Reeks.

Mr. Reeks was silent for a moment or two; then he asked, sternly, "Is that all?"

"Why, of course it is," replied the lady, dabbing her eyes with her handkerchief. "You didn't suppose—"

"My love, I supposed nothing," replied Mr. Reeks, dropping into his customary meekness. "But you were right to send for me, your natural protector; you had no right to be exposed to the thoughtless and vulgar remarks of those who may—quite naturally, Mrs. R.—admire you. Now, let us talk of another matter. Don't interrupt me; don't try to stop me, or persuade me to abandon the idea."

"What idea, George?" asked Mrs. Reeks, staring at him.

"My dear, I am going to sell those papers, the papers which belong to Gilbert Rickerby. Oh, yes; I know it's wrong, and mean and shameful, and all that kind of thing; but I won't sit still in the house with a broker's man when there is £500 waiting for me if I like to claim it. I can't explain everything to you, my love; suffice it that I am selling what doesn't belong to me—"

"But, George, the man is dead," urged Mrs. Reeks.

"The man is not dead; at least, I don't think he is. When this business is settled, and the money is in my hands, and I've had the satisfaction of kicking this wretched broker's man out of the house, I'll tell you the whole story, and what I've done, and all the horrors I've been mixed up in. That's one reason why I want to get rid of the papers—quite apart from anything I may get for them; I want to be rid of the business; I'm frightened of it."

"Five hundred pounds is a lot of money, George," said Mrs. Reeks, thoughtfully.

"A lot of money! It's more than I ever thought I should have at any time. My dear, we've had such a very hard time, all things considered; we have fought so hard and done nothing. This is a chance we ought not to throw away. It'll mean farewell to brokers and poverty; perhaps, if I'm lucky, it will mean farewell to Little Pond street. I'll take an office; I'll extend my connection; one can do such a lot with £500. That's been my difficulty from the beginning; I never had anything to start upon."

Mr. Reeks was growing excited, and was losing sight of the real right and wrong of the matter, and was keeping his hungry eyes fixed only on that splendid bait of £500. Mrs. Reeks, who had been at first more eager even than he was about the matter, began to have qualms.

"Are you quite sure, George, that you won't be doing anyone a wrong if you sell these papers? Remember, George, we've been unlucky so far, but we've gone through things with clean hands; there isn't a living creature can say we have wilfully cheated them. And I remember, George, you told me about that young girl—or at least you suggested something about her. If she is connected with Gilbert Rickerby, isn't it possible that we might be doing her a wrong as well as him?"

"My dear"—Mr. Reeks tapped his foot nervously on the floor—"you have such—such a very uncomfortable way of putting the thing. At any rate, don't let us talk about it any more to-night; something has got to be done to relieve us from our present uncomfortable position, and this seems to be the only way. We'll talk about it to-morrow; we can look at the matter more clearly then."

They were both very perturbed in mind, and it is probable that neither of them slept very soundly that night. But in the morning the beery-looking broker's man was again in evidence; he had to be fed, and the position looked more desperate than ever. The slow day wore away; the afternoon passed, and night came again, with no prospect of relief. More than all, fell rumor had got abroad, proclaiming the state of the case; and indignant tradesmen and others descended on the house and played havoc with the knocker, and shouted insulting remarks through the key-hole. At about 10 o'clock at night Mr. George Reeks rose up solemnly, took the candle and went up stairs. Mrs. Reeks must have known what was afoot, for she followed him without a word.

They got to the room where Gilbert Rickerby's possessions were spread about; Mr. Reeks set down the candle and took up the writing case into which all the papers had been thrust on the night when first they had examined them. Mr. Reeks looked about him guiltily, and his hands trembled as he fastened the case; then, without a word, they went down stairs again. Having gained the little sitting room and closed the door, Mr. Reeks made a compact parcel of the writing case and put it under his arm.

"My dear Mrs. R.," said the little man, solemnly, "if I could have seen any other way out of it I would never have done this; if any money, however small, had come in to-day, I would have kept my word and held on to these papers for the man to whom they belong. But we've got to be fed; that wretched broker's man has got to be fed; and the many knocks on our front door are becoming a scandal to the neighborhood. Five hundred pounds will enable us to snap our fingers at everyone, and I mean to get it to-night!"

Mrs. Reeks said nothing—perhaps wisely; all the words in the world would never alter the fact that the thing was wrong. But she, too, felt that there was no way out of their troubles but this, and so her silence gave consent.

Mr. Reeks put on his hat and left the house, dodging around the first corner, in order to escape anyone who might be lying in wait. Gripping the precious parcel tightly under his arm, he hurried away to Rickerby's folly.

It was a dark night, and the little man chose the darkest ways. He started at every shadow, and once he made a detour across the road when he saw a policeman standing underneath a lamppost. Taking, by this means, the longest route, he delayed himself considerably, and it was nearly midnight when he darted around the last corner and came towards the gate of Rickerby's Folly. Then, as he hurried along, he suddenly became aware of nimble footsteps close behind him, and broke into a run.

The footsteps became faster and nearer, and a hand was laid on his shoulder. He stopped and backed against the wall and gripped his parcel, turned his head sharply, and beheld Gilbert Rickerby!

"What have you got there, Mr. Reeks?" said Gilbert, pointing to the parcel.

"N—nothing," stammered Reeks, with a feeble smile. "Only—only a little parcel I was taking to—"

"A little parcel you were taking to Mr. Nugent Leathwood!" broke in Gilbert, sternly. "A valuable parcel, considering its size, Mr. Reeks; about £500, I should say, eh?"

George Reeks, with a sigh, held out the parcel towards him. "Concealment is useless, sir," he said; "you know all about it. Take it, Mr. Rickerby, and let me beg you to call a policeman. Give me in charge, Mr. Rickerby!" cried the little man, wildly; "give me in charge; it's all that is left to me!"

"No; I won't give you in charge, Mr. Reeks," replied Gilbert, with a smile. "I have been waiting here for you, because I wanted to have a word with you. Take the parcel; that's it, keep it safely under your arm. Now, come round the corner here, into that little alley of which you know, where we can talk without being disturbed."

They went together round to the back of the house, and stood in the darkness, in the alley of which Gilbert had spoken. And there, setting the little man with his back against the wall, Gilbert stood before him, with folded arms, and told him what he wished him to do.

"In the first place, Mr. Reeks, let me assure you that I do not intend to interfere with you in any way, or upset your plans in regard to that parcel. I intend that you shall get the reward from Nugent Leathwood, and that you shall, moreover, hand him the papers."

Mr. Reeks gasped, and almost let the parcel fall in his excitement. "But—but you surely don't—don't mean that he shall have them?" asked Mr. Reeks.

"Of course, not. But I intend that you shall fulfill your arrangement with him, and shall hand him the parcel. But I also intend to be present myself, and to claim the parcel again from him. Mr. Reeks, the time has come when I must pay off a certain debt which I owe to Mr. Leathwood—or, rather, let him pay me. There is an old score between us, and it has waited a long time to be wiped out; it shall be wiped out to-night!"

"But what do you want me to do?" asked Mr. Reeks, beginning to tremble again. "I would much rather leave it all in your hands."

"My dear friend, you have already helped me very much; I want you to help me just once more. Believe me, I can guess what prompted you to think of selling these things to-night; you are forgiven freely for that. But I swear to you that you shall not be landed in any further difficulties; I merely want you to go to the house, as arranged, and hand over the parcel to Mr. Leathwood, and to receive the money. See that you get the notes at the moment he has the parcel; be firm; I shall be there close at hand to assist you, if necessary. You will not be robbing me, because I shall claim the papers back from him directly after he has got them in his hands. Now, then, will you do it?"

"Mr. Rickerby," replied the little man, feebly, "I have already got into such terrible trouble over this matter that I am unwilling to do anything further in it. But if you can assure me that there is really no danger—"

"None at all, on my word. I have a fancy for letting this scoundrel think that he has triumphed right up to the last; and, at the last, I want to step in and show him what a fool he has been, and how completely he has lost everything. Only you must say nothing about me, and you will certainly not suggest that I am alive. Now, could anything be easier?"

"I suppose not, Mr. Rickerby," replied Reeks; at all events, I'll do it. And please believe that it isn't only for the money—although, goodness knows, I need that badly enough. But I want to show you that I never really meant to rob you, and that I am only too glad of the opportunity of doing something to prove my repentance. Yes—I'll do it; there's my hand on it."

They parted—Gilbert to slip in by that small gate in the alley, and Reeks to make his way round to the proper entrance and ring the bell ostentatiously. The latter, being admitted to the house by Jemima, was conducted into the room in which he had been before, and there found Nugent Leathwood awaiting him, together with Cornelius.

"Oh, so you're here at last, are you?" asked Leathwood, glancing around at him and scowling. "It's taken you time enough to make up your mind what to do. And I think I've got a little debt to settle with you."

Mr. George Reeks, remembering the other little debt which was to be settled that evening, felt that he could afford to be jaunty; he answered, with quite an air of gaiety

"Indeed, Mr. Leathwood; and what's that?"

"Don't stand grinning there at me, you little scoundrel!" shouted Leathwood, half-springing from his chair. "Didn't you take a young girl out of this place and carry her off, without so much as by your leave? And haven't you been instrumental in getting her away again? And yet you come in here, as pert as a dancing-master, and never a word about it."

"There's no need for violence, Mr. Leathwood," said Reeks, mildly, "and it isn't wise to call names. Whatever I may have done, I certainly haven't got the young lady now, and she's not in my hands; I have merely come to see you on a little matter of business in connection with a promise I made some days ago."

"Oh, indeed!" sneered Nugent. "You hear that fellow, Cornelius; he's come on a little matter of business! Well," he turned fiercely on Reeks, "what is your business? Out with it!"

"There were certain papers left behind by Gilbert Rickerby at my house, for which you were to pay me a certain sum of money. I have the papers here."

Nugent Leathwood glanced at the parcel eagerly. "Oh, so you've brought them, have you? And you expect that, after you've played the tricks you have, and kept me dodging about after you, you'll get your price for them, eh?"

"The price suggested was £500," said the little man, calmly.

"Exactly; that was the price suggested. But the price has gone down, my friend. Suppose we knock off two hundred and fifty for the first abduction of a certain young lady, and two hundred for the second abduction, and another hundred for the trouble to which I have been put? How much of your precious five hundred is left?"

Mr. Geoarge Reeks bowed with all the dignity he could muster. "I am afraid, sir," he said, "that we must regard the business as done with. The papers are yours—for a certain price; failing that price, they remain in my possession."

"The papers are mine—price or no price!" cried Leathwood, springing to his feet and moving swiftly toward the little man. "Give them to me!"

"I say, master," broke in Cornelius, nervously; "I wouldn't 'ave no violence if I was you. There's been violence enough. Mr. Reeks is a sensible man, an' the papers really belong to you. Mr. Reeks will give 'em up, I'm sure."

Nugent Leathwood had stopped when the old man spoke; he stood still looking at Reeks, and at the parcel under that gentleman's arm.

"No, we'll have no violence," he said. "Mr. Reeks will give them up. I know—"

"At the price mentioned," said Mr. Reeks.

"Well, here's your price, then," cried Nugent, crossing to the writing table at which he had been seated and pulling open one of the drawers. "If you doubt that the money is here—look at it, see for yourself."

Tossing the papers in the drawer right and left, he pulled out a bundle, twirled it through his fingers, and fluttered it before the greedy eyes of Mr. Reeks. "See," he cried, "they're all here—five hundred pounds' worth of 'em" Here's your price!"

Mr. Reeks felt at that moment that his share of the business was done; properly, Mr. Gilbert Rickerby should have been there, to fulfil his part of the bargain, and take the papers. Mr. Reeks saw the notes fluttering before his eyes; he remembered that he was to deliver the papers, and that Gilbert Rickerby was to be at hand to snatch them back again. That Gilbert Rickerby was not at hand was clealy not the fault of Mr. Reeks; his part of the bargain was fulfilled, and the money was his. He stepped forward eagerly, with outstretched hand.

Then, in a moment, his parcel was whisked out of his hand, and the notes were jerked just beyond his reach, high above the head of Mr. Nugent Leathwood. The baffled face of Mr. George Reeks stared into the grinning one of Leathwood.

"So—a good bargain—eh? You'll dictate terms to me, will you, you little scoundrel?" cried Leathwood. "You've tried your games once too often, Mr. Reeks; you've met with the wrong man. Five hundred pounds, indeed! Poor, little Georgie Reeks, where are your five hundred pounds now?"

"Here they are! Catch, Mr. Reeks!" Another voice, startling and totally unexpected, had broken in; the bundle of notes was twisted out of the fingers of Nugent Leathwood's hand and tossed over his head to Mr. Reeks, who caught them, deftly and backed away discreetly. Swinging around, with an oath, Nugent Leathwood faced that mysterious stranger with the bronzed skin and with the deep scar across one cheek-bone.

"Who—who the deuce are you?" gasped Nugent, recoiling from him.

"Gilbert Rickerby, at your service, cousin," responded the other. "Jemima!"—the old woman had followed him into the other room, and was standing silently watching him—"guard the door. Let no one pass. Now, Mr. Nugent Leathwood, what have you to say to me, when I have come, at last, to keep my appointment?"

CHAPTER XX.

Face to Face.

Nugent Leathwood had no doubt in his mind that what this man said was true. He had been stunned when the idea was first forced upon him, that the Gilbert Rickerby, whom he had never seen, was, in some mysterious way, hovering about, ready to fall upon him; he had been stunned afresh by the description—coinciding so exactly with his recollection of the stranger who had attended at the funeral and whom he had met at the inn—given by old Jemima of the Gilbert Rickerby she had remembered so well. His first wild thought was that the man he had strangled was not really dead; that he had, in some fashion, regained life and vigor, and escaped from the house. Then, when common sense told him that this was absurd, he ceased to have any coherent thought about the matter, and merely waited, bewildered, for what might happen. That he had blundered in some way, he knew; but that he had killed the servant instead of the master never occurred to him.

But if this man was really Gilbert Rickerby, the whole business had still to be faced; nothing had yet been done to bring about what he had so urgently desired. Even while he looked at the man, his brain seemed to be reeling under the pressure of a thousand wild thoughts; he thought of that first night, when the man had come into the room bearing the card of Gilbert Rickerby, and keeping the appointment made by Gilbert Rickerby; of the bank notes found upon the body of that man; of the strange, lucky chance which enabled him to take advantage of the death of Miles Probyn, and to set up a grave, as it were, in the public sight, which should cover his own crime. He thought, too, of the strange fashion in which different people had been drawn to thwart him, and to endeavor to rescue the girl, Olive, from his hands; and of the mysterious removal of the body from the deserted house; of the lights and shadows on the blinds of that house. But he was not the man to take defeat—especially vague defeat—lightly; he recovered himself in a moment, and bowed, ironically, to Gilbert.

"I've no doubt we shall find much to say to each other before we finish," he said. "But I must remind you that a man who makes such a preposterous claim as you have done must do something to substantiate it. It appears that you know something of this same Gilbert Rickerby—or think you do—and you're going to try and trade on the knowledge. It's a bold scheme, my friend; only a bold man could have thought of it. I don't discuss my private affairs before other people; if you care to talk to me alone, I'll listen to what you have to say."

"You will listen here and now—and before these people," replied Gilbert, quietly.

"You insolent dog!" cried Nugent, pretending wrath to cover up a deadly fear which was creeping over him; "do you know whose house you are in?"

"Yes—mine!" came the prompt reply. "Perhaps you would like to know how I got into it?"

"It would be interesting," said the other, with a sneer.

"I have lived here for some days past; I have been within a few yards of you; I have known all about your incomings and your outgoings. You saw shadows on the blind of the old haunted house, did you? You saw lights come and go about the windows—eh? You hound, murderer and profligate! The time has come when the shadows stand out in realities—when the ghosts of Rickerby's Folly become flesh and blood, to haunt

Mr. Veevers had been slowly shuffling along towards his wife, with an evident intention to make a bolt of it; he stopped when Gilbert spoke, and slowly scratched his head and grinned maliciously.

Nugent Leathwood seated himself on the edge of the writing table, with his hands thrust in his pockets, and one leg swinging, and nodded slowly to Gilbert. "Go on, my inventive friend," he said. "I'm curious to see how you'll play the part you have arranged for yourself. Let us have the whole thing."

"You shall have it all," replied Gilbert, and from the very beginning. "I have arranged that my friend, Mr. Reeks, here, should be present to-night, your guilty soul as it was never haunted before. Cornelius"—he turned sharply in the direction of the old man—"if I see you making towards the door again I'll twist that wry neck of yours a little more than nature has already done," because there is a part of the story which he must tell; my old nurse, Jemima Veevers, is also here at my request,—because the story could not be told well without her. Oh, yes; you shall hear it all, Cousin Leathwood."

"I see—I see," murmured Leathwood, nodding slowly and smiling; "quite a little syndicate; all the facts got up beforehand and the plot carefully arranged. But go on—go on."

"When I first received your letter," began Gilbert, speaking sternly and yet sorrowfully, "about my dear girl, and the affection you suggested she had for you, I made up my mind, after the bitterest struggle man ever had yet, to do the right thing. There had been so much wrong done in this unhappy house, Nugent Leathwood, in the past, that I determined no more wrong should be done through me. I said to myself: 'This girl has repented of a promise made when she was too young to understand the gravity of it; I will hold her to no such romantic dream as that; she has awakened to the reality of life, and knows her heart for the first time.' As God is my witness, I meant to give her to you, Nugent Leathwood, and to drop completely out of your lives. With that purpose I returned to England, prompted, perhaps, by curiosity to see the man Olive Mallory preferred to myself—but prompted, above all else, by the best and truest feelings that ever guided a man to do what was right."

"You tell your part of the story pretty well, I am bound to say," sneered Nugent. "It is good to find that such holy impulses can animate a man in these days."

"Mr. Reeks will tell you that I came to London and, guided by my unfortunate servant, took certain vacant rooms in his house in Little Pond Street, Camden Town."

"Doubtless the estimable Mr. Reeks will say anything that best suits his purpose," broke in Nugent. "And about this same servant of yours, of whom I have heard so much—what of him?"

"Wait; you shall hear about him in good time. I went to the house suggested by my servant, and hid myself there until the hour arrived for keeping my appointment with you. On the night that I was to meet you I set out for the house, taking my servant, James Holden, with me. For I had a purpose in that; I had changed my mind at the last moment."

"That's quite true—about your leaving my house, I mean," said George Reeks. "You went away that night with the servant, Mr. Rickerby, and neither of you ever came back."

"My purpose was this," continued Gilbert. "For some hidden reason—sheer instinct, I suppose—I mistrusted you. I wanted to find out, in an indirect fashion, what sort of man you were. So I gave my servant one of my cards, and put in his hands £500 in bank notes, to be given to you as an earnest of what I was prepared to do for the dear girl I had loved, and for the man who was to be her husband."

Telling Fortunes in Russia.

Whenever a number of young people come together in Russia during New Year's Eve and Twelfth Night, whether it be for dancing, playing games, or just spending a pleasant evening together, some one of the party is sure to propose "fate-reading," or "gadat," as it is called in Russian.

Seeking to know beforehand the fate of one's future sweetheart is a very amusing experiment, and there are two methods of going to work. The first is managed thus: A sheet of paper is cut up into strips about four and a half inches long, on every one of which a number is written. A big basin is half-filled with water, and by wetting one end of the strips of paper these are made to adhere to the rim of the basin all around, the dry ends pointing horizontally toward the center. A nut shell containing a bit of lighted wax taper is then set afloat by one of the party, the water having previously been slightly disturbed with the fingers so as to give it a slightly rotary movement. Sometimes the skiff will pass many times without harm, or, again, it will stay a pretty long time before one without igniting it; but the name set fire to is believed to be that of the person who is to play a prominent part in one's future life.—St. Nicholas.

Earthquakes of a Century.

Since 1800 the world has been visited by twenty-four earthquakes, in which 272,350 lives have been lost.

Only one of these occurred in the United States—that at Charleston, S. C., Aug. 31, 1886, in which fifty-seven were killed and $500,000,000 worth of property was destroyed.

The most disastrous was that which wiped out the city of Yeddo, Japan, on Nov. 11, 1855. More than 100,000 lives were lost there.

Turkey has been visited seven times: 1860, 1837, 1840, 1863, 1875, 1880 and 1894, with a total mortality of 40,000.

Italy has been visited five times: 1805, 1835, 1851, 1857 and 1881, with a total mortality of 45,114.

Japan has been visited three times: 1855, 1889 and 1891, with a loss of life estimated at 148,000.

South America, also, has been visited three times: 1812, 1854 and 1868, with a total mortality of 37,050.

Two shocks in British India, in 1819 and 1872, cost 2,500 lives.

At Djarkend, Russia, in 1859, 120 were swallowed up.

At Sushan, Persia, 1,200 perished in November, 1893.

This was the last fatal earthquake before the present disaster at Chilpancingo, Mexico.—Philadelphia Press.

Italian Officer a Suicide.

Giorgio Sinigalia, an Italian officer of twenty-two, has blown his brains out because a singing girl in a Roman theater would have nothing to say to him.

Fraulein Denys is a golden-haired daughter of Vienna, of extraordinary beauty. Sinigalia spent a fortune for jewelry for her, only to find she was already engaged to a Roman millionaire. Sinigalia engaged a room in a house opposite her lodging, and spent a day watching her and writing poems on her beauty. Then he sent her an ultimatum. She returned his letter with a few cutting remarks. Thereupon he killed himself.

The people of Rome got to know about the tragic affair, and howled with rage before the girl's rooms. The police advised her not to appear again until the popular feeling against her had subsided.—Rome Correspondence, New York World.

The Lord Must Understand.

When Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis was a seminary student, it is said that he prided himself on being more proficient in modern languages than his fellows. When it came his turn to say grace in the "mess room" he persisted in saying it in French, until he was cut short by the gruff remonstrance of a wild Western theologue: "Oh, here, Hillis, cut that."

"I suppose you object to what you don't understand," retorted Hillis.

"It ain't that," retorted the other, "so much as that I don't believe the Lord Himself knows what you are saying."—

Castor Oil for Rubber Plants.

An expert in the care of house plants says that rubber plants need nourishment, and advises pouring a tablespoonful of castor oil occasionally into a little trench that should be made around the stalk. Afterwards cover it with dirt. This care will be repaid in increased growth and beauty of the leaves.

FREE KIDNEY AND BLADDER CURE.

Mailed to all Sufferers from Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Gravel, Pain in the Back, Dropsy, etc.

The following letter from Hon. I. A. Hopkins, Chairman of the Board of County Commissioners, Ellsworth, Kan., tells how Alkavis cured after he made up his mind that he had but a short time to live.

Gentlemen:—I believe and know that I owe my life to Alkavis. I had been troubled with Kidney and Bladder Trouble for years. My limbs were swollen with Rheumatism so that I could hardly walk. I had to get up every hour of the night to urinate. I passed great quantities of blood on account of hemorrhage of the Kidneys and Bladder. I tried and had been trying everything in the shape of Medicine for Kidney Trouble that I could think of or that the Doctors recommended, but nothing helped me. I made up my mind that I had only a short time to live. I sent to you for three bottles of Alkavis; began to take it, and before I had taken it one week began to get better. My Kidney Trouble and Rheumatism were soon gone and I am in good health now. I have recommended Alkavis to a great many people and all have been benefited by its use.

Gratefully yours, I. A. HOPKINS."

Mrs. Ida A. Francis, of Mooresville, Ind., writes: "She had been bothered with Kidney and Bladder Trouble ever since she was six years old; did not get any rest day or night, and had to be up fifteen times a night at times. Was also troubled with Rheumatism, Female Complaint and Irregular Menses, also symptoms of Dropsy. Tried many physicians but received little benefit. Two years ago took Alkavis and was completely cured and states she will answer any letter that comes to hand concerning the wonderful medicine." Mrs. Mary Fox, Seymour, Iowa; Miss Viola Dearing, Petersburg, Ind.; Mrs. Jas. Young, Kent, Ohio; and many other ladies join in testifying to the wonderful curative powers of Alkavis in various forms of Kidney and allied diseases, and in other disorders peculiar to womanhood.

Kept Her Diamonds

Daughter of General Sherman Finally Triumphed Over Tax Collectors

There is quite a romance connected with the diamonds that are now in possession of the daughters of Gen. W. T. Sherman. Mrs. Thorndike, one of the daughters, has long been a favorite in Washington society. She was also greatly admired by the khedive of Egypt. When Mrs. Thorndike's sister, Minnie Sherman, was married to Lieut. T. W. Fitch his majesty, desirous of expressing his friendship for the old warrior, selected from his treasury diamonds valued at $200,000, had them set as a necklace and sent the gorgeous ornament to the bride. But an unfeeling United States customs department fell upon the wedding gift and held it for a ransom of $20,000, the amount of the legal 10 per cent duty. Here was a pretty how-d'you-do, for neither the bridegroom nor the general could scrape together the sum demanded. The bride wept, the newspapers gossiped and the husband grew pale with mortification. But there was naturally a sympathetic feeling on the part of every American woman at the thought of a poverty-stricken bride unable to gaze upon $200,000 in diamonds that actually belonged to her. A public subscription was started; then the national government became interested, and finally congress stepped in, and, goaded to chivalrous rescue by its wives and daughters, remitted the duty by special enactment.

Can you not imagine the rejoicings of the Fitches and Shermans when the splendid gems were at last placed on the beautiful neck for which they were intended, and the pride with which the owner allowed them to be placed for safe-keeping in the United States treasury? But you certainly cannot imagine her horror when a great, ugly brute of a tax collector from some Pennsylvania county in which she lived sauntered in and demanded an annual tax more than equaling the lieutenant's salary for an entire year! That settled it. There was nothing to do but to send the white elephant back to the khedive. Conceive the mental condition of an American woman obliged to give up one-fifth of $1,000,000 in diamonds! But, if you will believe me, she couldn't get rid of them in this way. Back they came, by return mail or something of that sort, with a letter from his Egyptian majesty suggesting that the necklace be taken apart and the diamonds divided among Gen. Sherman's four daughters, delicately insinuating that thus the burden of taxation would not be so heavily felt. And that is how Mrs. Thorndike happens to own one-fourth of them.

We could not bear pleasure but for the preparation of pain.

It is not our burdens but our sore backs that make life hard.

Billy Brown's Joke

Only Time a Private Sought to Have Fun with Gen. Funston

While Brigadier General Funston's command was lying in camp near Manila, a number of recruits arrived from the western states. One of the rookies, having exhausted his supply of clean linen and not having learned to be his own laundress, asked a veteran where he could get some washing done.

"Do you see those tents over there by that clump of trees? Well, go there and inquire for Mr. Funston. He's a grouchy little chap; but if you talk pleasantly to him he'll fix you up."

The recruit went as directed and discovered Gen. Funston walking up and down in front of his tent, dressed in an old pair of khaki breeches and a regulation blue flannel army shirt.

"Where can I find Funston?" asked the recruit.

"My name is Funston. What is it?"

"I want to get some clothes washed."

"What! Who sent you to me?"

"Billy Brown, over here in the Tenth Cavalry."

"Corporal of the guard!" called General Funston.

The corporal came on a run.

"Young man," said Gen. Funston to the recruit who was seeking a laundryman, "go with the corporal and show him Billy Brown, so that he can bring him over here. And you come with him and bring all the dirty clothes you have. All, remember—all."

They departed, and returned after a short absence with Billy Brown and a huge load of shirts, socks, underwear and dirty linen generally.

Said Gen. Funston to Billy Brown: "Did you send this man here to have his clothes washed?"

"Yes, sir; just for a joke."

"For a joke, oh! Well, all right. I like a joke myself, and we'll carry this one through. Corporal!"

"Yes, sir."

"Take this man Brown down to the river and have him wash those clothes carefully and return them to the owner. See that he does the job up in good style. And, by the way, if you have any soiled clothes of your own, or if any of your friends have, just let Brown do them for you."

"I think I can keep him busy for some time, sir."

Gen. Funston resumed his walk.

It is worth while making many foes to make one friend.

Cowboys as Jokers

Their Exuberant Spirits Not Appreciated by Railway Managers

There is joy in the hearts of the cowboys who are gathered for the winter in the little cow towns along the line of the Great Northern railway in northern Montana. The railway company has announced its indignation at the actions of the boys, and they are gleeful in consequence. To stir up the wrath of a great railway corporation is a luxury not often given to the boys who punch cows.

The management of the railway takes exception to the habit the boys have formed of letting off revolvers, with apparent recklessness, during the passage of passenger trains through the town. It is an amusement dear to the soul of the cowboy. Just now he has more money than he has at any other time of the year, and also has more ammunition. The presence of a passenger train at the station, with its load of curious outlanders, moves him to show off his badness. He whoops and yells and fires his revolver until the train has pulled away; then he relapses into his everyday self, satisfied that he has scared the passengers to a frazzle. But Mr. Hill says this is reprehensible, and must stop. Will it stop? Well!

After all, the boys do not do any great amount of damage. They enjoy their innocent little amusement of shooting holes in the sky and trying to impress the tenderfeet passengers. The boys have simply carried into manhood that very juvenile desire to show off, and, when they let out a fusillade of shots and a series of yells calculated to straighten out the kinks in a sleeping-car porter's hair, they are only trying to put some color and romance into their very unromantic and practical lives. The only harm is to the nerves of the passengers, but just think what a lot the experience gives the passengers to write about! What lurid letters they send home of their adventures in the wild and woolly! What delicious thrills of excitement and terror can be felt in those few moments at the cow town depot! Why, it's a slice of real life drama, better than a bushel of Hamlin Garland's stories. It is an open question whether the passengers do not secretly like the thing, for all the protests they may make to the railway people. But it will be interesting to observe the attempts to stop the cowboys.—Anaconda (Mont.) Standard.

Modest Fees.

Lawyers do not usually get the small end of a bargain with their clients, but the Green Bag recalls two incidents where the clients had rather the best of it.

Sir Walter Scott's first client was a burglar. He got the fellow off, but the man declared that he hadn't a penny to give him for his services. Two bits of useful information he offered, however, and with these the young lawyer had to be content. The first was that a yelping terrier inside the house was a better protection against thieves than a big dog outside; and the second, that no sort of lock bothered his craft so much as an old, rusty one.

Small compensation as this was, the first brief of the noted French lawyer, M. Rouher, yielded still less. The peasant for whom M. Rouher won the case asked how much he owed him.

"Oh, say two francs," said the modest young advocate.

"Two francs!" exclaimed the peasant. "That is very high. Won't you let me off with a franc and a half?"

"No," said the counsel; "two francs or nothing."

"Well, then," said the client, "I'd rather pay nothing."

And with a bow he left.

Facts About Deafness.

A French surgeon has collected statistics relative to deafness, says the London News. It appears that males are more subject to aural diseases than females, and that out of every seven middle-aged persons there are two who do not hear so well with one ear as with the other. In every thousand children under fifteen years of age four show symptoms of some ear disease, and six a marked deficiency in hearing power. The liability to disease increases from birth to the age of forty, and then begins gradually to decrease as old age advances. Out of the total number of cases subjected to surgical treatment it is estimated that about 53 per cent are cured and 30 per cent permanently improved.

A Revolutionary Age.

Soulless corporations, heartless coquettes, conscienceless rascals of various sorts we have had with us now these many years, and it looks very much now as if a kind of Providence was about to even things up a little by providing us with such useful contrivances as wireless telegraphy, heatless light, smokeless powder, boneless shad and seedless oranges. If some genius would rise up now and give us a breed of biteless dogs and stingless mosquitoes, together with some loseless umbrellas and spendless cash, we shall all be happy and content.—Leslie's Weekly.

Boost for Woman's Rights.

Woman's rights got a big boost out in Montana the other day, when a judge declared that it didn't matter whether a wife was earning more money than her husband or not—when she demanded divorce she was to get alimony just the same. The only trouble was that the judge added that it served a man right, anyway, for getting married. And yet they talk about woman's being illogical! The most strenuous suffragists would never say that anything served a man right for getting married; neither would she assert woman's "right" both to her own earnings and to the support of her divorced husband. If the woman in this particular case made such demands, some male lawyer put her up to it.—New York Evening Sun.

A Ranchman's Experience.

Lea, S. Dak., March 3d.—Wm. H. Neelen, a ranchman, whose headquarters are here, says:

"I have been afflicted with Kidney Trouble for several years. I had a very severe pain in the small of my back, so bad that I could scarcely sit in the saddle.

"I also had a frequent desire to urinate when riding, and the pain and annoyance I endured was very great.

"I tried many medicines without getting any better, till at last I was told to try Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I have used in all six boxes of this medicine, and can say that they have done me more good than anything else I ever used.

"I have had more relief and comfort since using Dodd's Kidney Pills than I had for years before."

Archbishop Ryan's friends tell this story of his grace:

The archbishop was about to take a train for Baltimore at the Broad street station, when a young man accosted him, saying:

"Your face is familiar. Where in hell have I seen you?"

"I really don't know," said the archbishop. "What part of hell do you come from?"—Philadelphia Times.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP Co.

Men of Affairs

One may sail the seas and visit every land and everywhere will find, that men of affairs, who are well informed, have neither the time nor the inclination, whether on pleasure bent or business, to use those medicines which cause excessive purgation and then leave the internal organs in a constipated condition. Syrup of Figs is not built on those lines. It acts naturally, acts effectively, cleanses, sweetens and strengthens the internal organs and leaves them in a healthy condition.

If in need of a laxative remedy the most excellent is Syrup of Figs, but when anything more than a laxative is required the safe and scientific plan is to consult a competent physician and not to resort to those medicines which claim to cure all manner of diseases.

The California Fig Syrup Co. was the first to manufacture a laxative remedy which would give satisfaction to all; a laxative which physicians could sanction and one friend recommend to another; so that today its sales probably exceed all other laxatives combined. In some places considerable quantities of old-time cathartics and modern imitations are still sold, but with the general diffusion of knowledge, as to the best medicinal agents, Syrup of Figs has come into general use with the well-informed, because it is a remedy of known value and ever beneficial action.

The quality of Syrup of Figs is due not only to the excellent combination of the laxative and carminative principles of plants, known to act most beneficially on the system, with agreeable and refreshing aromatic liquids, but also to the original method of manufacture. In order to get the genuine and its beneficial effects one should always note the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package.

A number of farmers living on the east side of the river in the town of Rocksbury held a meeting Monday morning in M. C. It will run north, emptying into the Red Lake River west of town.

Not much business was transacted at the meeting, most of the time being occupied by allowing bills. Action on all ditch petitions was postponed for thirty days. VOL. XIX. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1902. NUMBER 10

NOTHING NEW.

Received from the Red Lake Agency.

No definate news has been received from the Red Lake Agency where the treaty with the Indians is being made, this week, although there are many rumors. One is to the effect that the Indians have been offered and accepted $3.75 per acre for their land, but this is no generally believed. The people here all believe that the treaty will be made, but they do not believe such a high price will be paid for the lands.

MAJ. McLAUGHLIN

Brief History of the Man Making the Treaty.

Maj. James McLaughlin, who has successfully negotiated numerous treaties for the government, went to the Fort Totten Indian reservation in 1870 as agency blacksmith. He at once became the friend of the Indians and was soon after appointed Indian agent at the fort. About 1882, when Gen. Sherman made his famous trip to the reservation at Standing Rock, he discovered in Mr. McLaughlin a proper person to settle Indian troubles.

At that time the Indians at Standing Rock were very quarrelsome with the whites, and Mr. McLaughlin, at Gen. Sherman's suggestion, was sent by the government to the agency and at once all disputes were settled. It was James McLaughlin, who when Sitting Bull, worked up by the ghost dance, created trouble at the reservation, sent the cavalry to arrest the noted Indian leader, who had fortified himself a short distance away. The old chief would not allow himself to be taken into custody, and, as a result, went to the happy hunting grounds.

He has been successful in all his negotiations with the Indians.

Of Course.

The regular term of the municipal court of this city" is a phrase that sounds sweet in the ears of all Thief River people, and the thriving city at the end of the road is justly entitled to all the satisfaction it can extract from its municipal institutions.—Times.

MARCH 22.

Miss Olaf Krarer to Lecture Here on that Date.

The second entertainment to be given in this city by the Slayton Lyceum Bureau for the benefit of the piano fund of the city schools will be given in the Methodist church on Saturday evening March 22. It will be a lecture on Esquimau life by Miss Olaf Krarer. She is a pleasant-faced little woman, only three feet five inches in height and weighing 100 pounds who left Greenland with a party of Icelanders and was educated by missionaries in Iceland. She told many interesting things about East Greenland, of which so little is known. In her native land she said they have no government, no laws, no written language, and no man is greater than another. There is only one social distinction—the man who owns a flint for making fire is looked upon as a big gun, but he is bound by custom to loan it freely and without remuneration. Water—that is fresh water—is unknown, and from the day of a child's birth to its death it knows not the luxury of a bath.

Tickets for the next two entertainments on sale at New Drug Store at 75 cents for the course. Single tickets 50 cent. Matinee in the afternoon, children 10 cents.

LOTS OF 'EM.

Settlers Coming in on Every Train.

For the past two weeks the city has been filled with prospective farm buyers, and people looking for business openings. All of the real estate dealers are doing a big business, and many sales of farm lands are reported. The purchasers are mostly men who intend to take up their actual residence here, and very few sales are being made to speculators.

City property is also in great demand and numerous sales are being made every day.

ONCE LIVED HERE.

Son of Hank Gonon Shoots His StepFather.

A shooting affair which may lead to interesting developments occurred in Fergus Falls last Saturday night, the victim being Frank Taylor, a well known horse trader, who has resided there for some years, making excursions through the country each summer. About two years ago Taylor became infatuated with a woman named Mrs. Hank Gonon, who resided in Thief River Falls during the winter of 1899-1900, with her husband and son, Mr. Gonon being a horse trader and is well known in this section. Mrs. Taylor secured a divorce and Mr. Gonon did likewise, and Mrs. Gonon and Mr. Taylor have since been undisturbed.

Saturday night Taylor started in the direction of his former home, where his divorced wife resides and Mrs. Gonon followed and demanded admittance. Mrs. Taylor refused at first to let her in but when she threatened to break down the door she finally unlocked it. Taylor was not inside, having stopped at the barn, and the two women appear to have engaged in a hand-to-hand conflict as soon as they met. Mrs. Gonon's son a boy of about 16, had followed her into the house, but she told him to go back to a wagon which was standing near. He did so, and returned a few minutes later with a 32-caliber revolver, a weapon belonging to Taylor himself. He began firing immediately and Taylor's daughter declares that the first shot was aimed at her and came within two inches of her head.

Meantime Taylor had come up and the boy turned weapon on him. Only one bullet took effect, but physicians state this would have killed him almost instantly had it not struck a rib which deflected its course. It is feared blood poison will set in the bullet having carried a piece of badly soiled clothing into the wound. The boy fled after the shooting, but was captured while trying to board the Northern Pacific passenger train during the night. At present Taylor's greatest anxiety is to secure the boy's release, and he has deposited $1400 in the hands of a friend telling him to spend it all if necessary to secure the boy's release.

A certain town which had been brought up to high pitch of excitement by a smallpox report, says the Hanlontown Gazette, was recently invaded by an old German with mottled countenance going to the counter with the remark: "I haf der schmallpox." Before he could get any further there was a general stampede for the door and some of the clerks crawled under the counter while the proprietor flourished a sugar scoop and ordered the intruder out of the store. But nothing daunted the Dutchman continued; I haf der schmall pox of butter vich I promice to bring in der udder day.

New Drainage Law.

Senator Grindeland's bill to amend the drainage law of 1901, which has passed the legislature, provides that the engineer in charge of county work must give a bond of $2,000. Damages assessed are to be paid from the county treasury. Benefits are to be assessed where overflow of lands is prevented by the ditch. The construction of ditches must not be delayed by appeals from awards of damages or assessments of benefits. Awards held up bear 6 per cent interest from date of assessment. Auditors of different counties through which a ditch passes may join in contracting for its construction. Benefits may be assessed to townships, railroad companies or other corporations as well as to individuals, and the assessments against corporations and individuals enforced by liens."

It Was Good.

The concert given by the Slayton Jubilee Singers in the Methodist church last Friday evening was very entertaining, and all present enjoyed themselves. The company was composed of artists and each number was encored and the program doubled. It is not often that the people here have opportunity of attending a high class entertainment of this kind.

PILES OF WHEAT

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES COMPILED BY THE CENSUS BUREAU.

ENORMOUS TOTAL PRODUCTION

FLOUR AND WHEAT PRODUCT INCREASING BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS.

FIGURES STARTLING BUT TRUE

COMPARISON SHOWS THAT THE CENSUS BUREAU HAS NOT EXAGGERATED.

Washington, March 7—Some interesting figures concerning the production of wheat and flour in the United States have just been made public at the census bureau. These figures show a total production of wheat in the United States in 1900 of 631,657 bushels.

The estimate made by the department of agriculture, of the same crop, gave the production as 547,303,846 bushels. The census figures exceed those of the department of agriculture by 20.8 per cent. In speaking on this subject L. G. Powers of Minnesota, chief statistician of the agriculture division of the census office, said:

"That the estimate in my division of the census is not excessive is shown by the data collected by the manufactures division.

The Average Per Cent

covered by the manufacturers report in twelve months, closing approximately with March 1, 1900. During that year the manufacturers of the United States reported that they had ground 488,914,004 bushels of wheat. The amount of wheat exported was 98,898,137 bushels and the amount required for seed by the farmers was approximately 50,000,000 bushel, which makes a total of 67,500,000 bushels, or nearly 14,000,000 bushels in excess of the amount reported by the preceding census.

The excess of the total as given above over that reported by the agricultural division of the census, is evidence that we could not have presented an exaggerated statement of the total wheat crop and that if it is in error it is wrong by showing too small and not too great a product. The comparison made emphasizes the great disparity between the reports of the census and the estimate of the department of agriculture and establishes the essential correctness of the former and the incompleteness of the latter.

The Inaccurate Statistics

gathered by the various bureaus of the government is one of the reasons advanced for a permanent census bureau. The discrepancies between the figures of the census bureau and the estimates of the agricultural department are illustrated, not only in the returns for wheat and flour, but also in the statistics on the value of live stock, recently made public by Director Merriam.

The agricultural department reported for the fiscal year 1900, milch cows in the country to the number of 16,293,360; the census returns show 17,139,674. The department reported 27,610,044 of "other meat cattle," but the census returns show of the same cattle, 35,334,015 over one year of age, and 15,330,333 under one year of age. This great difference in figures is attracting attention in congress.

Captain Gets Out of Prison on a Writ of Habeas Corpus.

Leavenworth, Kan., March 7.—Capt. James C. Reed was released from the federal penitentiary yesterday on a writ of habeas corpus. He has been behind the walls only one week. Reed's release was the result of the recent ruling of the United States circuit court of appeals that sentences passed on volunteer officers by a court martial of regular army officers were void. Reed was sentenced to serve five years in the penitentiary for receiving bribes. He was a captain in the commissary department at Manila.

A few days ago the order was received for him to appear before an examining board to determine his fitness for active service and with a view to placing him on the retired list. Maj. Ellis was a brother-in-law of Col. A. E. Wells of the First cavalry, who was stationed at this post ten years, while a major in the Eighth cavalry.

END OF HIS TOUR

PRINCE HENRY ARRIVES IN NEW YORK, PLEASED WITH HIS TRIP.

TALKS TO NEW YORK SOLONS

VISITS ALBANY, AND IS WELCOMED TO THE CAPITAL BY GOV. ODELL.

WEST POINT CADETS IN REVIEW

PRINCE GREATLY IMPRESSED BY THE WORK OF THE ACADEMY.

New York, March 9.—Prince Henry of Prussia yesterday completed his tour and is once more in New York, where he will remain until Monday, when he goes to Philadelphia. He was absent from the city for nine days, during which time his special train was within the territory of thirteen states and traveled a total distance of 4,358 miles. He was greatly pleased with his trip, and, through his aide, Capt. von Muller, issued a statement expressing his satisfaction at the opportunity which came to him, and his gratification at the cordiality with which he was received throughout the country. His last day on the special train which carried him to the South, West and East, rivalled in interest any of the others spent by the prince on the tour, for it began with a visit to Albany, included a run in bright sunlight down the west shore of the Hudson river, and at the United States military academy at West Point. It was 2 o'clock when the special train departed from Boston, and daylight when it was climbing through the range of hills that divide Massachusetts and New York.

Albany was reached at 8:30 o'clock, and Mayor Gaus, in behalf of the city, and Gov. Odell, for the state, met the prince at the union station with formal official greetings. Then, under cavalry escort, he drove to the city hall and capitol to return the courtesy shown him. The people of the city lined the route throughout and their cheers sounded in popular welcome. He was received by the two houses of the legislature and returned his thanks to their presiding officers for the honor. He loked through the capitol and, returning under guard of cavalry, infantry, and police to the union station, left at 10:30 o'clock for West Point.

Greeted at West Point.

West Point was reached at 2 o'clock, and the prince was received with the military honors due his place in the naval service of his country. Col. Mills came to the station with a number of the officers of the academy and with a troop of cavalry, drove him to the parade grounds on the heights above. The cadets formed in six companies, were at once marched on the field, and the prince, with Col. Mills and their respective staffs, inspected them. Dress parade followed with the prince as reviewing officer. After the review the cadets were drawn up in close formation and the prince, advancing to the front of the first company, delivered a short address.

Prince Is Pleased.

At the close of the review the prince visited Memorial hall, where the officers on duty at the academy were introduced to the prince. He greeted them all very warmly and complimented them on their work.

Leaving Memorial hall the prince and his staff went to the riding school, where the cadets gave an exhibition of riding. The parting call of the prince was at the house of Col. Mills, whom he repeatedly congratulated and thanked.

On his arrival at New York Capt. Titus and a dozen detectives, two-score patrolmen and a squad of mounted police were on hand to conduct the prince to the Waldorf-Astoria.

The prince had originally intended to return to the Hohenzollern, but the discovery of a case of scarlet fever in the crew changed his mind.

FATHER CHASES ELOPERS.

Arrives in Time to Give His Blessing.

Chicago, March 9. — After racing across the state in an endeavor to prevent the marriage of his daughter, Miss Daisy Clem, to Gordon Alexander, H. A. Clem, president of the National stock yards at East St. Louis, arrived in Chicago last night just in time to witness the conclusion of the wedding ceremony. Then, instead of becoming enraged over his lack of success, he accepted the situation and gave his blessing to the couple. The only objection which the parents had to the young couple's marriage was that occasioned by their extreme youth.

Consuls at Tien-tsin Get Into a Squabble.

London, March 9—Cabling from Tien-tsin, the correspondent of the Standard reports a dispute between the French and American consuls there arising from the attempts of the French consul to include certain mission properties in the French settlement. The American consul hoisted the American flag on the disputed building. The French consul now threatens to hoist the French flag above the American.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The House Agrees to One Amendment to the Constitution.

St. Paul, March 7.—The house yesterday adopted a single constitutional amendment for submission to the voters at the next general election. In effect it is as follows:

"To strike out the provision of the constitution that all taxes shall be as nearly equal as may be, and all property on which taxes are to be levied shall have a cash valuation, equal and uniform throughout the state; to substitute a provision that "the power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away;" to strike out the words "laws shall be passed taxing all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money;" to change maximum personal property exemption from $200 for each individual to $300 for one member of a family; to provide that "all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects and shall be levied and collected under general laws for public purposes;" to provide that existing railroad gross earnings taxes shall not be affected.

As yet the proposed constitutional amendment is the only thing in the way of tax reform to show for the $50,000 which the extra session has cost, unless it be the repeal of the 1901 dog tax law, which, after ten months' trial, proved unsatisfactory.

In the Senate.

The old board of control controversy opened in the senate yesterday.

It was occasioned by the introduction of a bill by Senator R. V. Brower of St. Cloud to exclude from the financial management of the board of control, all the state's educational institutions, and re-establish such financial management with the respective boards which previously had it in charge. He succeeded in getting the bill ordered printed and referred to the reception committee.

The "restrictive" constitutional amendment in taxation prepared by the senate judiciary subcommittee was debated for three hours on general orders yesterday afternoon, recommended favorably without a single amendment, and passed.

IOWA LEGISLATIVE SYMPATHY.

Resolution of Hope Is Offered and a Spirited Debate Is Expected.

Des Moines, March 8.—Representative Timothy Donahue yesterday introduced a resolution of sympathy in the house for the Boers in South Africa. The resolution expressed the hope that the Boers might soon prove victorious and that their Valley Forge experiences might end in a glorious Yorktown. The resolution will be called up to-day and will be the subject of considerable debate if pressed.

The house committee on municipal corporations reported favorably on the bill giving cities the power to regulate telephone rates. The bill for municipal ownership of telephones was killed.

The senate committee on judiciary decided to recommend for passage the bill for the reorganization of the supreme court, the judges to receive salaries of $6,000. This bill was debated at great length in the house and it was finally passed with the salary at $5,000. The original bill provided for continuous sessions of court and the senate will insist on this.

The senate spent all day debating the question of the state university tax bill, but was unable to come to a vote.

ROOSTER KILLS MINK.

Plucky Bird That Shows True Minnesota Breeding.

Le Sueur, Minn., March 8.—Night before last some marauding animal entered the poultry house of P. J. Foley, a wealthy farmer living in Tyrone township, near Le Sueur, and killed all of his fowls except three hens and a rooster, a white Plymouth Rock. Yesterday morning on visiting the coop Mr. Foley discovered that the animal had returned during the night and killed the three remaining hens. The rooster was alive, but fairly red with blood and stripped of many of his feathers. A search about the premises resulted in the finding of a hole. The animal was dug out and proved to be a full grown mink. He was nearly dead, the rooster having pecked out both his eyes and cut his body in dozens of places with his sharp spurs.

LEGAL BATTLE WAXES HOT.

Wisconsin Town Has a Hard Time Raising Money.

Baldwin, Wis., March 8.—In 1899 the county board of St. Croix county provided for the issue of $50,000 in bonds to pay for building a new court house. One L. W. Keyes brought action to restrain the issue of bonds, but the circuit court refused the injunction and the bonds were sold to the Hudson banks. Keyes subsequently appealed and the supreme court declared the bonds void. The banks filed claims against the county for money it had received. Mr. Keyes has employed counsel and is proceeding to resist the payment of the money by the county. The matter will come up for hearing March 13 at Hudson.

FALLS TO DEATH.

Brakeman Is Jolted Off His Train Near Dedham.

West Superior, Wis., March 8. — A brakeman on the St. Croix & Duluth road by the name of W. R. Hay was yesterday afternoon killed by being run over near Dedham. It is not known just how the accident happened, but it is supposed that Hay was on the rear of the train and was jolted off, allowing the remaining cars to pass over his body. He lived for several hours after he was picked up. The body was brought to this city by Coroner Dudley but no inquest will be held. It will be sent to Aitkin, Minn., where the young man's parents live.

Killed by a Train.

Carroll, Iowa, March 8.—A man identified as John B. Modole was killed by the train here. Papers on his person gave the address of his brother as Langford, S. D., and he was wired and ordered the body held until he could arrive. The dead man is about twenty-nine years old.

Died of Her Injuries.

Milladore, Wis., March 8.—Mrs. Mat Prouzau died of her injuries received from being burned by a falling lamp, in an accident two weeks ago.

TO STOP MERGER

LAST RESORT OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA IN THE BIG FIGHT.

WILL ATTACK THE CHARTER

ACTION CONTEMPLATING FORFEITURE OF THE GREAT NORTHERN'S CHARTER.

BLOCKED BY COURT'S DECISION

QUO WARRANTO PROCEEDINGS THE ONLY WAY NOW LEFT.

St. Paul, March 8.—Attorney General Douglas intimated last evening that as a last resort quo warranto proceedings might be begun against the Great Northern railway, contemplating the forfeiture of its charter, if necessary to prevent the merger under the Northern Securities company.

Lawyers profess to have discovered that under the decision of the United States supreme court denying jurisdiction in the state's attempt to begin action against the merger, the state is barred absolutely from further proceedings.

The court held that it had not jurisdiction because the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific were not made parties to the suit. But, lawyers argue, if the roads were made parties, the court would not have jurisdiction, because they are citizens of Minnesota, and, therefore, the case is Not for the Federal Courts.

Nor could the state begin action in the state courts, because the Northern Securities company is a New Jersey corporation, and, therefore, not within the jurisdiction of the Minnesota courts. Therefore, lawyers argue, the state is blocked in proceedings against the merger unless congress passes remedial legislation.

Neither Attorney General Douglas nor M. D. Munn, associated with him in the state's actions against the merger, were willing last night to agree with the position that Minnesota has no redress in any courts. Neither would the state's counsel say positively that there is a redress, and if so, what it is. Both, however, gave the inference that they believe something may be done in the state courts, if not directly against the Northern Securities, then in such a way as to prevent the merger.

BREAD KNIFE ENDS IT.

Railroad Men Squabble and the Unpleasantness Results in the Death of One of Them.

Helena, Mont., March 8.—Paul Koch, thirty-seven years old and unmarried, was stabbed to death by Foreman Tighe at the boarding house of the East Pacific mine near Winston. The men had quarreled and came to blows. They were separated, when Tighe seized a bread knife from the dining room table and plunged it into his victim's breast. Koch expired almost instantly. Tighe is under arrest at Townsend. Koch was a cook and a member of the miners' union. He was an Odd Fellow and Knight of Pythias.

Winona to Expand Park System.

Winona, Minn., March 8.—The board of park commissioners has voted to confirm the appraisement recently made for the taking of property around Lake Winona for park purposes. Rather more than half the interested property holders filed a protest to the award of the appraisers, but comparatively few of them are disposed to carry the matter further, as the land is so generally conceded to be of little value for general use that it would not pay to contest the matter in the courts.

Shot His Brother.

Chatfield, Minn., March 8. — Alfred Winslow was cleaning a shotgun which he did not know was loaded. The gun was accidentally discharged and the full charge of shot entered the back of his brother Bert. Part of his lungs were blown away and large pieces of clothing were carried into the wound. He is in a very serious condition and small hope is entertained for his recovery. He is about twenty-five years old and has a young wife.

Smallpox on Train.

Pembina, N. D., March 8—The Northern Pacific train from the South on Tuesday had a smallpox patient on the north-bound train. At the international boundary line Dr. Henderson, in inspecting the train, found the patient. The train was at once vacated and returned to Pembina. The Pembina authorities ordered the train to Grand Forks, where the patient took passage.

Suspected Murderess Released.

West Superior, Wis., March 8.—Owing to the fact that no word was received from Chicago Jack Duval, Gustav Anderson and Charles Jackson were released from the county jail. They were being held on the suspicion of being connected with the murder of a police officer in Chicago about two years ago.

Another Arm Sacrificed.

Baraboo, Wis., March 8. — Randall McMartin had an arm torn away with a cornshredder yesterday morning. His brother Marion suffered a like accident a short time ago.

Suicide of a Farmer.

Fargo, N. D., March 8. — William Baker, a well known farmer near Hannaford, committed suicide by shooting. No cause is known for the suicide, as he was very successful.

Son's Disgrace Kills Father.

Conesville, Iowa, March 8. — David Bebb died here yesterday of a broken heart. His son Tom was on trial at Muscatine charged with criminal assault upon eleven-year-old Della Worley. The shock killed the father.

Indian Well Named.

Sioux Falls, S. D., March 8. — John Bad Boy is the name of a bad Sioux Indian who has been brought here by John Belding of Deadwood. The prisoner was indicted for larceny. He will be held here for the April term.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

Lawmakers Will Probably Adjourn Monday.

St. Paul, March 8.—The Minnesota legislature will undoubtedly adjourn sine die Monday, which makes to-day the last day for passing bills. Members of both senate and house are confident that all necessary business can be transacted to-day.

The house yesterday passed a resolution to adjourn Tuesday, which went to the senate and was not acted on. The ready agreement of the conference committee on constitutional amendments, members think, will make it possible to adjourn a day sooner.

The house yesterday passed by a vote of 90 to 11 Representative Sherman Smith's bill submitting the question of calling a constitutional convention to the people at the next election.

The house spent a large part of the day discussing Senator Miller's bill providing that a majority of votes cast on a constitutional amendment shall be sufficient for its adoption, instead of a majority of all the votes cast at the election, as under the present law. The bill went to the judiciary committee.

The Minnesota legislature will send no memorial to congress protesting against selling mules to Great Britain for use in the Boer war. Senator Stockwell's Boer resolution came to the house yesterday morning and was indefinitely postponed.

In the Senate.

TURN DOWN PRO-BOER.

Donahue Resolution Is Defeated in the Iowa Legislature.

Des Moines, Iowa, March 9. — The house yesterday, by a vote of 51 to 38, defeated the resolution introduced by Timothy Donahue expressing sympathy for the Boers. The vote was on a motion to lay on the table. The senate passed the bills granting a one-fifth mill levy each to the state university and the agricultural college. This money is to be used for building purposes. It is estimated that the levies will yield each institution $110,000 annually. The house defeated the university bill a few days ago, but a motion to reconsider was filed. The house passed the bill empowering savings banks to accept deposits amounting to twenty times their capital stock, instead of ten times, as at present.

THOUGHTFULNESS PAYS.

Great Northern Sends a Nebraska Woman a Check for $30.

Sioux City, Iowa, March 9. — The Great Northern Railroad company has remembered Mrs. Mary Schorer, who, last fall, by waving her skirt, flagged an incoming passenger train on the Pacific Short Line west of McLean, Neb. Fires which had been burning along the right of way had burned up to a bridge and the stringers were beginning to blaze a little. Just at this time the passenger was due, and, while there was no real danger, Mrs. Schorer, who lived near by, thought there was danger. She hurried down the track, took off her skirt and flagged the train. Her intention was all right and the company yesterday sent her a check for $30.

THROUGH THE HEART.

Mrs. Orcutt of Billings, Mont., Instantly Kills Her Husband.

Billings, Mont., March 9.—Mrs. C. H. Orcutt, wife of a Billings stone mason, shot and instantly killed her husband. She says she acted in self-defense. According to her story, Orcutt came home drunk and abusive. He went to bed and, getting up in the night, announced his intention of killing her, and went into the kitchen for a weapon. The frightened woman hurried to another room and secured a pistol. Her husband attacked her with an axe, and she fired three shots at him, the last penetrating his heart, instantly killing him.

JOYS OF THE EAST

SEVERE SNOWSTORM THE LATEST DIVERSION IN THE WEATHER PROGRAM.

RAILROAD TRAVEL IS TIED UP

DRIFTS CLOSE MOUNTAIN PASSES, BLOCK RAILROADS AND CLOSE MINES.

MEANS RENEWAL OF FLOODS

NEW YORK, PENNSYLVANIA AND WEST VIRGINIA SUFFER MOST.

Philadelphia, March 7.—With the exception of the extreme southeastern section of the state, the entire commonwealth of Pennsylvania is in the grasp of the heaviest snowstorm of the winter. Railroad travel is practically tied up in many places and the indications for to-day are not encouraging.

Easton, Hazleton, Wilkesbarre and other points north of Philadelphia report that snow fell all day and still continues. Last night there were twenty-two to twenty-four inches of snow on the ground at those points. Heavy drifts have closed up mountain passes, blocked railroads and closed down coal mines. In the Northern Central section, Williamsport reports sixteen inches of snow.

The storm is practically severe from Harrisburg west to beyond the Allegheny mountains. At Harrisburg, Altoona and Bedford, twenty-four inches of snow have fallen, with the prospects that it will continue several hours. From all points in that territory serious delay to steam railroads is reported. The main line of the Pennsylvania railroad is practically tied up at Altoona, all passenger trains being hours behind time.

At the Pennsylvania railroad offices in this city the information was given out that all trains from the west are six to seven hours late. Trains to the west from here are leaving on time. Streams in the interior of the state are still swollen from the recent heavy rains, and there is apprehension that further damage may result from floods.

New York Also Suffers.

Whitehall, N. Y., March 7. — The worst blizzard of the season struck Eastern New York last evening. Reports from Crown Point, Fort Ticonderoga and other lake points state that a fierce gale is raging with heavy snowfall. The storm is fast extending south.

Hudson—A heavy snowstorm set in at noon yesterday. The snow drifted badly and caused the entire force of men who were cleaning the tracks of the New York Central railroad to suspend work. It will probably be a week before the Central tracks can be used for through traffic.

Hoosic Falls—This section of Eastern New York is now in the throes of a severe storm. A heavy snowfall began yesterday morning, blockading traffic in general. The same conditions prevail along the Vermont line and in Eastern Massachusetts.

Elmira—A heavy snowstorm set in yesterday morning and the entire Chemung valley is covered with snow to the depth of eight inches. On account of the recent floods which covered one-third of the city the storm is a great hardship to the poor people in this flooded section. Telegraph and telephone service and trains are crippled.

New York — The sleet storm which raged yesterday afternoon was succeeded last night after a brief intermission by another fall of snow. The snow is dry and threatens to drift badly. A force of about 6,000 men is at work on the streets, which are badly glutted.

West Virginia Catches It.

Wheeling, W. Va., March 7.—Thirteen inches of snow fell here during the night and morning and business is at a standstill. The traction lines are tied up and the steam roads are operating under extreme difficulties, all trains being several hours late. Factories are crippled by the inability of many employes to reach them. Both telegraph companies are having trouble with their wires, as are the telephone companies. Reports from the interior of the state tell of even heavier snowfall.

Railway Traffic Impeded.

Baltimore, Md., March 7. — Reports from all parts of the state show that the storm which has been raging here since Tuesday night was equally bad in the mountains on the west and on the lowlands on the east. No serious results are as yet reported, the damage thus far being confined to telegraph and telephone wires, trees and trolley lines. Railway traffic has been impeded but not seriously.

Dash for Liberty.

Columbus, Ohio, March 7. — Charles M. Clark, a deserter from Troop L, Fourteenth cavalry, recently brought to the barracks here from Marion, Ohio, where he was captured, made a successful break for liberty Wednesday morning and escaped from his guard, who shot him through the hand.

Rebels Are Defeated.

Panama, March 7.—News has been received here that the government general, Rodriguez, with 500 men, defeated 400 revolutionists at Sevilla, department of Magdalena, on the 22d of last month.

Bank Cashier Kills Himself.

Elkhart, Ill., March 7. — Frank W. Cottle, cashier of the State Bank of Elkhart, whose alleged shortage of $32,000 caused the closing of the bank, blew out his brains yesterday at his residence.

Gets His Old Job.

Madison, Wis., March 7.—Judge E. W. Keyes has been reappointed postmaster of Madison postoffice. He was appointed for the first time by President Lincoln, and since then has been reappointed by five other presidents.

A MASTERFUL WOOING

By EVELYN RAYMOND

Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Publishing Company

The event of the season was over in the little Texas village of Cypress Bayou. All the San Jacinto bay country had furnished the dancers, and among them had come Henry Mitchell, just home after seven years' absence in remote Alaska. Success was written in his face, and success meant wealth with the Mitchells, hence the people fell to wondering if Henry Mitchell would be true to his bay-country sweetheart of seven years ago, for Caroline Wells was poor.

The man, however, did not reveal his feelings. He danced and talked with other old friends as with Caroline Wells. But in her face, and not in the others, there might have been seen a faint glow as of hope. The rekindled light of a forgotten love still shone in her eyes the second day later as she stood upon the shore of the San Jacinto, contemplating the leaden waste of water in the late afternoon. An east wind blew and the girl's wavy brown hair was strewn out upon it, or swept down in a bunch of curls to hide the red that the wind was painting over the tan of her cheeks. The changing lights in her face were very beautiful to look upon, like the varied shadows that hurrying clouds sometimes reflect in a restless sea. There was coming into her eyes a look of anxiety as she regarded the river before her.

As from habit, she shaded her eyes with her hand and looked out across the stream to an island in which for over fifty years that early pioneer and gentleman and officer of the second British war, Col. Smith, had chosen to make his home. His wife had shared the island home. Their house had once been all but carried away by one of the devastating river floods. Mrs. Smith was now alone upon the island. In the event of a flood she would be in great danger.

As Caroline Wells looked at the heavy, threatening sky, and the curling waters, steadily creeping toward her, she gave way to a shiver of dread, and turned toward her house, through a field of half-picked cotton. But a look of determination had settled into her countenance. Shortly she returned with a great storm coat, which she flung into a long, low boat that lay restlessly tugging at its chain. She cast a sorry eye out to midstream, where the strong wind had raised the water into perilous ridges. But, knowing that she was the only help for Mrs. Smith within six miles, unless it be from across the river, she reached out to pull the boat toward her.

Carried away by the wind; it seemed to resist her, but with some effort she succeeded, and after a hurried glance back at her home, she jumped into the boat. Before she thought it possible, the wind had caught the boat and carried it far upstream, across the inner bay. But Caroline was used to the river, and, controlling the boat, she was soon pulling with long, steady strokes toward the point where she could best cross the mid-current for Smith island. She made some progress, but such was the force of the wind that after half an hour she had only reached the point of the peninsula from which she intended to cross the main current to the island. She had still her fiercest struggle before her. Strong as the girl was from her river life, her wrists ached and her arms felt heavy from the exertion. The wind had now grown to a gale. The spray dashed over her in sheets. But the stout heart of pioneer fore-fathers yet urged her to the relief of the old lady upon the island.

With the boat headed downstream against the wind and tide, she pulled slowly, surely, out; drenched and panting, and with a face as white as the foam crests of the black waves that swept in walls against her boat.

She had passed the channel posts, and was now well out in midstream, and saw, as she instinctively gauged her course by a persimmon tree upon the point of the peninsula, that she had gained a little downstream against the tide. This came to her gradually as she struggled in the spray, but gradually also came to her the knowledge that there was a darkness brooding over the river that could not be brought alone by the approach of night. Knowing her course well, even in such a gale, she had not once turned to look back, but now a hurried glance told her that a terrific storm of rain was coming, and that before she could hope to reach the island she would be overwhelmed by it. But the same hurried glance had showed her the white hull of a boat in the distance. She knew that the only white boat on the river was that of the Mitchell's, from the south shore. Her thoughts flew across her mind like frightened stormbirds; had Henry Mitchell seen her struggling in the tide, or had he come to rescue Mrs. Smith? Would he reach them in time to save either? Could he beat the oncoming storm? Another glance told her he could not. Before she could look again there burst upon her the storm in its great fury—a very tempest of wind and rain and seething waves.

At the first onset the oars were torn from her grasp and the boat was swung from its course and carried in great bounds from wave to wave with the storm. Above the deafening roar of wind and river there came to her the sound of breaking timbers, and she knew that the house on the island had been swept from its moorings. Soon, too, she knew the cause. A wall of black water bore down upon her. Her boat met the wave and was borne stanch boat. There was a great shock. forward through the air upon its crest.

She saw the face of Henry Mitchell.

Then, suddenly, while it was sliding back to the yawning trough that followed, the boat shook from stem to stern and stopped so instantly that the iron-ribbed side of the bow was stove in, and the girl thrown forward upon her face.

There was an instant of silence about her, during which Caroline heard the low gulf tidal wave that had passed, go thundering onward to its further work of destruction. Controlling her terror, she lifted her head to look about her when, with a start she saw that her boat was caught in a group of channel posts, and, left by the height of the wave that had passed, now hung between them, quite out of the water. To change her position meant to be thrown out of the boat. While she contemplated her peril she saw through the curtain of rain and darkness, being borne down toward her, a great, gray object. It rocked and swayed in the swelling rolls like a ship, but she could make out in it the outlines of the floating Smith house. It came fast, and swept by almost within touch. With a mad impulse to reach it the girl flung herself from the boat. She fell into the water, but clutched a projecting timber and circled her arms about it. There she clung in the gathering darkness, nearly submerged at times, and again raised almost from the water by the swinging of the house. But such a thing could not be for long, and, indeed, it was not, for suddenly she felt a grasp of iron about her waist and, yielding to a stronger will, she loosened her hold.

Above her she saw the face of Henry Mitchell, and then felt herself in his arms. The marvellous skill learned in stemming the ice floes of the Lower Yukon had enabled him to withstand the first stress of storm, and, carried forward by the resistless force of things, he had neared the floating house, had seen Caroline's leap into the water, and had been able to so far guide his boat as to reach her. There, with the tempest rolling below and around them, and with the shadow of death darkening above them, the man forgot life itself, and, clasping the clinging form of the girl to his bosom pressed her wet face to his and kissed her until the love in her eyes bade him cease. Then, with the strength and energy of a giant, he bent to his work of guiding the boat to shore. The drift of the stream told him that they were being driven across the current, and if his efforts prevailed they would gain the inner bay—a harbor with its headland of shells. Rapidly but painfully they neared the safer waters of the inner bay.

Now, as they sped toward the shell headland, there came once more to their ears from mid-stream, the sound of the crashing and falling of beams and timbers; and, well knowing that the friend whom they had sought to save was no more, a great heartburst of grief coursed between them, the eyes of each sought the other's, and in that moment of sorrow their souls were linked together. The headland of shells loomed beyond them.

The skill that had kept them ahead of the wind now kept them atop of a great wave, and the grounding of the boat far in upon the beach brought them to safety. There by the side of the white boat they told to each other the vows that were soon to again make the bay-country furnish its dancers, and the little village of Cypress Bayou to record in its annals another event.

HOW EDUCATION IS SHOWN.

Prof. Butler Gives Certain Characteristics by Which to Judge a Man.

Any one can tell a gentleman by looking at his back, but it takes close observation to discover by cursory examination whether a man is educated or not. By education we do not mean merely the fact that a man has gone through a high school or a college and made the motion of receiving an education. But we refer to that training of the mind which receives and grasps facts and understands them in the light of past wisdom.

Professor Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University, New York, has given five rules by which any one may tell an educated man.

First, is the correctness with which he uses his mother tongue and the precision of his idiom. The educated man moves easily among the words of Saxon, Roman and Greek origin as among old friends.

Second, is the man's manners. Not the veneer that may be put on or off as occasion serves, but the genuine habit of the man himself.

Third, is the power of reflection. Given an idea, the educated man will throw upon the subject the light of a number of corelated facts that are completely beyond the power and ability of the uneducated.

Fourth, is the power to grow. Uneducated minds cease to develop at a certain point. They become non-receptive.

Fifth, is the ability to do. Retirement from the world and contemplation are no longer signs of education and enlightenment. The modern man of education must accomplish things.

WELL DIRECTED.

A Letter That Could Hardly Fail to Reach Its Destination.

A French barber recently opened a shop in Duluth, and the first thing he did was to write a letter to his parents in Canada, enclosing one of his business cards. The printing was like this: "John Jones, barber, No. —— West— street. Everything clean. Fresh towels to every customer."

The letter was written in the French language, as that was the only thing the old folks could read. In answering the letter, the barber's little sister was called upon to address the envelope. While she could not read English, she printed, the best she could, the letters on the card, and here is the way she did it:

JOHN JONES,
Barber, No. — West—street,
Everything clean. Fresh towels to every customer.

Fun with the Bank of England.

J. Pierpont Morgan is the hero of an anecdote repeated at a recent meeting in the headquarters of the steel trust, and if not apocryphal, illustrates a bent of humor hitherto unsuspected in the banker.

While in London he visited the Bank of England with a large currency note, for which he wished to obtain gold. The teller examined the note and handed it back.

"You have not indorsed it," he said, glad of an opportunity to occupy an attitude.

"Is this not payable on demand?" asked Mr. Morgan, simulating surprise.

"Yes, if indorsed"—haughtily.

The magnate frowned. "I am very careful whose notes I indorse," he said, with mock severity.

"Do you challenge the Bank of England?" gasped the clerk, gazing at the visitor as upon a blasphemer.

"If you are solvent, why do you want my name on your paper?"

The glare of suspicion which accompanied the words was too much for the clerk; he stared speechlessly.

"Very well," continued the magnate, with vigor, "we will let it go to protest."

The petrified clerk looked alarmed about it, but could offer nothing in reply except a mumbled and ridiculous assurance that the bank was not in distress. Then Mr. Morgan smiled and indorsed the note.

He Agreed.

An amusing incident occurred the other afternoon in a gentlemen's outfitting shop in New street, Birmingham, when a customer came in to purchase a hat, says London Spare Moments. He tried on several, and was evidently hard to please, the counter becoming covered with the rejected. At last the salesman picked up a brown felt bowler, brushed it round with his arm and extended it admiringly.

"These are being very much worn this season, sir," he explained.

"Are they?" said the customer, thoughtfully surveying himself in the mirror, with the hat on his head. "Do you think it suits me?"

"Suits you to perfection, sir—if the fit's right."

"Yes; it fits very well. So you think I had better have it."

"I don't think you could do better, sir."

"No, I don't think I could; so I won't have a new one."

The salesman had been pushing the old hat.

"Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise," was said by Gray in his "Ode to Eton College."

Navies of Three Powers Compared.

The parliamentary paper which was issued in London on the evening of Feb. 11, giving the terms of an alliance between Great Britain and Japan for the preservation of China and Corea, has caused much comment, and has made the naval strength of these countries a subject of much discussion.

According to the latest published accounts, the number of Great Britain's officers, seamen and marines provided for in the estimates for 1901 are as follows:

Officers and men	82,821
Coast guard	4,200
Marines	18,500

In addition to these there are 6,520 boys in training.

The total number of officers and enlisted men in the Russian navy, according to the latest published accounts, is between forty thousand and forty-five thousand. The fleet consists of six first class battleships. The Borodino, Alexander III. and Oral have a displacement of 13,400 tons each, and carry four 12-inch, twelve 6-inch quick firing and twenty 3-inch quick firing guns each and many smaller guns. The Tavrichesky has 12,840 tons displacement, and carries four 12-inch, twelve 6-inch quick firing, and teen 3-inch quick firing guns and thirty smaller pieces. The Retvizan, 12,700 tons displacement, has four 12-inch, twelve 6-inch quickfiring, and twenty 3-inch quick firing guns, and the Tsarvitch will have the same armament, but will be of 1,000 tons more displacement.

These first class battleships, although they are put on the official list of the Russian navy's fleet, are in course of construction and none had been completed on Jan. 1, 1901. Since that time much progress has been made, several of the ships have been made available, and the Retvizan, which is being built at the Cramp yards, will be ready for delivery to the Russian government on March 16.

The rest of the Russian fleet is composed as follows:

Second class battleships	12
Third class battleships	6
Coast defence vessels	7
Armored cruisers	1
Protected cruisers	11
Gunboats	30
Old armor clads	8

According to published reports there are in the British navy eighty-two vessels of more than 8,000 tons displacement, aggregating about 1,000,000 tons displacement. This includes the vessels in course of construction.

The tonnage of Japan's twelve vessels of more than 8,000 tons displacement is about 146,000 tons.

Russia's twenty-seven vessels of more than 8,000 tons displacement aggregate 322,900 tons.

eight of the same class are being built.

The United States has six first class battleships in commission and twelve are in course of construction.

These are some of the fighting ships of the world:

England	565	58
Japan	95	19
Russia	265	95
France	358	89
Germany	231	15
United States	80	48

This list includes cruisers, destroyers, etc.

The Religious Lady Sees Ben Hur.

"My landlady," said a young man, who lives in a Spruce street boarding house, "is very religious. I don't think she has been inside a theater more than five times in her life. One of these occasions came off last week, when I gave her a couple of tickets I had bought and couldn't use, an unexpected business engagement preventing. The next morning at breakfast some one asked her how she had enjoyed the performance. "Oh, it was grand, simply grand," she exclaimed. "There was a chariot race, and men in kilts, and it was just like the Bible. And we had such fine seats." "Where were your seats?" asked one of her boarders. "They were in the best place," she replied. "They were in the third pew back from the band."—Philadelphia Record.

Wireless Telegraphy.

Benjamin Franklin leaned pensively on the shelving shore and tossed bits of brimstone into the Styx.

"Wireless telegraphy," he observed, "and they say it is a modern invention. Rot!"

He sent a flat stone hurling out over the wavelets, and it skipped eight times before it finally plunged beneath the surface.

"Rot," he continued, "rot! Were there any wires about my kites? Didn't I telegraph to the skies without the aid or consent of any wire trust on earth? Those fellows are always claiming originality for what they do." And again he heaved a chunk of brimstone viciously at the unoffending waves.

"But, after all," he added, thoughtfully, "I don't know as I have any right to thank God that I am not as modern men. My predecessors gave me a great deal of assistance, with my original sayings in Poor Richard's Almanac." And rising with a grunt he dusted off his long-tailed coat, lighted his pipe on the atmosphere and trudged puffing up the bank.

POWELL IN A ROW

SON OF MINISTER TO MEXICO CHALLENGED TO FIGHT DUEL.

HIS COMMISSION FORBADE IT

DETACHED FROM THE EMBASSY AND ORDERED TO JOIN HIS REGIMENT.

EXPELLED FROM ALL THE CLUBS

ALTERCATION OVER AMERICAN POLITICS IN THE ORIENT AND ANTILLES.

Washington, March 11.—Lieut. Powell Clayton, Jr., U. S. A., son of the minister to Mexico, has recently been detached from that embassy and assigned to the cavalry station at Fort Myer.

Concerning this change there is a story not told in the military records. During the Christmas holidays young Clayton became engaged in an argument with a Mexican officer concerning American politics in the Orient and the Antilles. The Mexican said some things which Lieut. Clayton resented. Finally the lie was passed and the entire company became involved in blows.

That night a Mexican officer formally waited on Lieut. Clayton and in behalf of one of the belligerents challenged him to a duel. Clayton explained that he could not fight, his commission in the United States army forbidding in the strongest way any such performance. Clayton was expelled from all the clubs in the City of Mexico.

At the same time a prominent official intimated to the minister that his son's position in society at the Mexican capital had been compromised and that the wisest course for him was to withdraw.

NO REST FOR HENRY.

Central Figure In Another Round of Entertainment.

New York, March 11.—Prince Henry of Prussia was the central figure yesterday in another round of entertainment arranged in his honor. He first listened to a concert at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, largely made up of his favorite American songs, the concert being arranged at his request. When that was over he drove to the University club to a luncheon which was not concluded until mid-afternoon. In the evening he was the guest at dinner of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and met a large party made up of persons of social prominence. When the prince bade farewell to the company at the Vanderbilt home he went to the New York Yacht club for an informal reception and the hour was late when he returned to the Waldorf-Astoria for the night. He found time between the four main events on his program for the day to receive a delegation representing the Commercial club of St. Paul and several callers, and to finally complete the arrangements for the last two days' stay in the country and his departure for home. He had intended to be present at the religious services on the imperial yacht Hohenzollern in the morning, but the case of scarlet fever which developed there several days ago altered that plan. Instead he remained at the hotel, arising late and breakfasting at his leisure.

NEW TRIAL FOR JESSIE.

Miss Morrison Granted Another Chance by Supreme Court.

Topeka, Kan., March 11.—Jessie Morrison, who was convicted of murder in the second degree, of Mrs. Castle, a year ago, was granted a new trial by the supreme court. The court held that there was error in the empanneling of the jury which tried Miss Morrison. Miss Morrison was a rival of Mrs. Castle in a love affair. She was invited by her victim to her home and in a quarrel that ensued cut her throat with a razor. The first trial resulted in a disagreement.

Mrs. Harriet Blaine Beal and Capt. Philip were also of the party. Miss Roosevelt expects to return to Washington the latter part of the month.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

Senate and House Deadlocked Over Constitutional Amendments.

St. Paul, March 10.—The conference committee report on proposed constitutional amendments was adopted in the senate Saturday forenoon with but one dissenting vote. There was no objection to the added provision empowering the legislature to establish a mortgage registry fee.

The house refused to concur when the new bill was presented after passing the senate, and its conference committee was reappointed. The senate reappointed its committee and a session was held in the afternoon, at which minor changes were made in the bill.

The remaining sections of the Anderson tax bill, embracing the administrative features relating to real estate formerly contained in the report of the state tax commission, were adopted Saturday by the senate. The work of the senate is represented by a mass of amendments, but none affects the principles of the bill.

After spending the entire afternoon in considering the measure the senate decided to defer action until Monday morning, when the bill will be continued as a special order and brought up for passage. There is no opposition in the senate and its enactment is not doubted.

In the House.

Representative Alford Saturday tried to have his bill divesting the state board of control of any authority over the state university, state normal schools, and the schools for the blind and deaf, placed at the head of general orders. After considerable discussion the motion was lost by a vote of 43 to 49.

Representative Johnson had recommended for passage by the committee of the whole his bill making an appropriation for the Louisiana Purchase exposition.

Senator Daly's resolution instructing the railroad and warehouse commission to inquire into passenger rates in Minnesota and to try to secure a rate of not less than 2 cents per mile or more than 2 1-2 cents per mile, first-class, passed the house.

DOWIE WILD AND WIERD.

In a Frenzied Tirade He Charges Conspiracy.

Chicago, March 11.—Is John Alexander Dowie losing his mind as the result of being compelled to turn over $175,000 to Samuel Stevenson, his brother-in-law? Judge Tuly and Judge Dunne can offer no other explanation for a wild scene yesterday on the stage of the Auditorium, when, in a frenzied tirade, Dowie talked of plots against him and of using dynamite on his enemies. He shouted that the Iroquois club was at the bottom of a scheme to ruin the lace industries in Zion City. His talk was strange, disjointed and wierdly incoherent, and his actions as he rushed about the stage were startling. He astonished his hearers by telling them that he had three sticks of dynamite in his pocket, which he would to-day fling at members of the bar. Against Judge Tuley the modern Elijah was especially vehement, branding the venerable judge as a dangerous man, because, so Dowie said, he was a member of a secret society.

WAR TAX BLUNDER

SERIOUS DEFECT CREEPS INTO AN IMPORTANT MEASURE.

BILL WAS VERY LOOSELY DRAWN

SENATE COMMITTEE WILL PREPARE A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE BILL.

CUT TOBACCO TAX AWAY DOWN

WOULD MAKE IT LESS THAN IT WAS BEFORE THE WAR.

Washington, March 10.—The house bill repealing the war revenue taxes has been found to be so loosely drawn and defective that the senate finance committee may report an entire substitute for the measure. It is not the intention of the committee to change the intention of the bill to repeal the war taxes, but only to put it into language that will carry out that intention.

The most serious defect is in the tobacco schedule, which in the form passed by the house would not only remove the war tax but in all probability would also reduce it below the rate which existed before the passage of the house bill. It provides that the tobacco section of the war revenue act and the amendments to it by the law of last March shall be repealed, and in lieu of the tax of 12 cents per pound now imposed by law on manufactured tobacco, snuff, etc., the rate shall be

Six Cents a Pound.

The reduction made by the act of last March, however, was not accomplished by specific amendment of the tobacco section of the war revenue act. A separate paragraph provided merely for a rebate of 20 per cent on the tobacco stamps sold, which practically reduced the tax from 12 cents to 9.6 cents per pound. As that provision is not repealed by the house bill, which fixes the rate at 6 cents a pound, the tobacco manufacturers would still be entitled to the rebate of 20 per cent and the tax would therefore be 4.8 cents a pound.

The finance subcommittee in charge of the bill will draw up a substitute for this section of the house bill and perhaps for the entire measure, as the phraseology of other sections has been found defective.

BREIER NOT CONVICTED.

Alleged Wife Slayer Is Acquitted in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, March 10.—J. Breier yesterday was acquitted of the murder of his wife, Selma Breier. The jury was out over twenty-four hours and early this evening returned their verdict of not guilty.

The verdict is a complete surprise to nearly all who listened to the evidence in the case. Mrs. Breier was found dead in the basement of her home July 18.

She was lying at the foot of the stairs and appeared to have been thrown down. This was the theory of the prosecution, but it could not be definitely established, and the failure to secure a conviction is attributed to this by the district attorney.

"There is no farming safer nor more profitable than irrigation farming," said Col. Cody. Some of the prospective settlers are in the United States, but the majority are still in Sweden."

PROLONGING THE REGENCY.

Young King Alfonso Not Big Enough for His Job.

London, March 9. — The Daily Mail publishes a letter from its Madrid correspondent that all the important Spanish newspapers are discussing the possible necessity of prolonging the regency, owing to the incapacity of King Alfonso to exercise the functions of a sovereign. There is talk of forming a sort of King's council, says the letter, to be composed of the queen regent, the presidents of the cortes, the archbishop of Toledo and the ex-president of the council of ministers. Another version of the story is that the queen regent is to prolong her regency for five years in order to enable the king to complete his education by travel, etc. The correspondent concludes his letter by saying that the censor stops all telegrams on this subject.

INFATUATION AND MURDER.

One of the Most Cold-Blooded Murders Michigan Has Ever Known.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 9.—The latest developments in the investigation into the death of Mrs. Ada Klump, the young wife of William Klump of Lowell, point to one of the most cold-blooded murders Michigan has ever known. After a diligent inquiry into the circumstances of the case, Sheriff Chapman took William Klump into custody and lodged him in jail here. The officers express the belief that Klump either sent poisoned powders through the mail himself, or knew who did send them, and that the main object was the removal of Mrs. Klump. A motive is found for the alleged crime in the story that Klump was infatuated with another woman, a widow, whom, it is alleged, he had agreed to marry.

SAVED BY TEARS

MOTHER AND SISTER PLEAD EFFECTIVELY IN A CHICAGO COURT.

BOY ESCAPES PRISON SENTENCE

JUDGE RELENTS AND SENDS HIM TO THE HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

HAS BEEN IN TROUBLE BEFORE

YOUTH TEARFULLY PROMISES TO REFORM AND LEAD AN HONEST LIFE.

Chicago, March 8.—Pleas and tears of a mother and a sister saved Andrew Dewitt Root from the penitentiary. Judge Smith had declared his intention to impose a prison sentence on the young man, who admitted that he had entered a room in a Clark street hotel and had rifled a satchel belonging to a traveling salesman. The youth was before the court under the name of Henry Payne and the records showed that he had paid a $25 fine in Milwaukee on a larceny charge.

When the boy's sister heard the court's decision she burst into tears and, approaching the desk, began to plead with the court for her brother.

"Give him another chance and we will save him," pleaded the girl. "I know he has been in trouble before and is weak, but if you send him to the penitentiary he can never reform."

Refined Women.

The mother then joined her daughter in the plea. The two women gave every evidence of refinement and sincerity and the court listened to their application with increasing interest, as they told of their efforts to keep the boy from wrong. They admitted previous failures, but were so hopeful of the future that the court could not refuse them.

"I will send this young man to the house of correction for a year," and to the boy, he said: "You heard the pleadings of your mother and sister. They have shown you love and forgiveness. Can't you reward them by being a man?"

The boy tearfully promised, and the court assured him that if he would listen to his mother and sister when they visited him at the bridewell, he would be able to be an honest man after his release.

MANY ARE KILLED

FRIGHTFUL WRECK ON THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC IN TEXAS.

FIFTEEN DEAD AND MANY INJURED

CARS TAKE FIRE AND MANY OF THE INJURED ARE CREMATED.

CAUSED BY A BROKEN RAIL

TRAIN IS THROWN FROM TRACK WHILE RUNNING AT HIGH SPEED.

San Antonio, Tex., March 9.—A broken rail caused a frightful wreck on the Southern Pacific railroad near Maxon station, twenty-five miles west of Sanderson, at 3 o'clock yesterday morning. From the latest accounts received here fifteen people were killed outright and twenty-eight more or less injured.

The ill fated train left San Antonio at noon Thursday, two and a half hours late, and at the time the accident occurred, was running at a high rate of speed in order to make up time. The road at the point where the wreck occurred is in a rough country, the curves being sharp and the grades heavy. It was when rounding a curve that the train left the track, it is said.

On Account of a Broken Rail.

The hour was 3 a. m., fifteen hours after the train had left here, showing that it was still behind time. All the passengers were asleep and the shock that followed was the first intimation they had of the danger. The train was going at such a rate of speed that the tender and engine landed seventy-five feet from where they left the rails. The cars behind piled up against the engine, caught fire and all were consumed except the sleepers. A private car owned by Thomas Ryan of Bay City, Mich., with his family aboard, was attached to the rear of the train, but it was pulled away before the fire reached it, and no one in it was injured.

All the injured in the coaches just behind the express and baggage cars

Were Cremated.

The people in the sleepers were saved with the assistance of the uninjured passengers.

The mail car, the baggage car and the coaches were piled together against the engine and were ablaze in a few seconds. It was impossible to move any of the coaches or the tourist cars, as they were all off the rails, and they were soon consumed by the flames.

As soon as it was possible to get in communication with the division headquarters relief trains with surgeons and physicians were started from El Paso, Del Rio and Sanderson, picking up along the line all the surgeons that could be found.

All of the injured who were in a condition to be moved were sent to El Paso, where they are receiving careful attention.

INFANT'S DIRE PROPHECY.

Five-Weeks-Old Baby Causes a Panic in Kansas.

Harper, Kan., March 9.—An alarm, amounting among the more superstitious almost to a panic, has spread here because of what are believed to be the inspired words of a five-week-old baby. The child began talking at the age of three weeks. Its first attempt was made during its morning meal Feb. 20. Its words were clear and incisive, and it has kept repeating them at irregular intervals during wakefulness ever since. They are: "Six years of famine in Kansas." The sentence is taken by many to be a message from God, to be disregarded by hearers at their peril. Already a number of the hundreds who have come and listened have gone home, packed up, and are leaving the state, firm in the belief that a long drouth is approaching. This wonderful baby is well formed and of normal growth, but grinds out the words like a phonograph. It can say nothing else. The father, John Shelby, is a laboring man. Hundreds have visited here and waited hours to secure a confirmation of the story from the child's own lips.

She has been annoyed by the criticism of her proposed visit to London, and not desiring to have that visit discussed as in any way official, has given it up. The president had nothing to do with the acceptance of the invitation from Mr. and Mrs. Reid by his daughter, and he did not influence her to cancel the engagement.

Force of Troops Hurried to the Disturbed Section of China.

Pekin, March 11. — Chinese officials are greatly disturbed over the conditions at Jehol (Cheng Te), about 100 miles northeast of Pekin, where bandit soldiers have captured a priest. An official of the foreign office declares that the Russians have already dispatched 500 troops to Jehol from the Manchurian border. The trouble began over the settlement of claims of native Christians, and it resulted in rioting between Christians and the non-Christians. Brigands took advantage of these conditions to plunder the country, and the Russian telegraphic connections were incidentally cut. The foreign office says the captured priest is a Belgian. It was reported March 7 from Pekin that the Chinese court had ordered the immediate release of this priest in order to forestall the entry of foreign troops into the district of Jehol, which is rich in gold mines.

Excommunicated Chicago Priest Is Rehabilitated.

Chicago, March 11.—Rev. Joseph J. Crowley, the Roman Catholic clergyman who was the central figure in a sensational scene here Nov. 3 last, when the lights in The Holy Name cathedral were turned out and the celebration of high mass was stopped in an effort to enforce a ban of excommunication against Father Crowley, has returned to Chicago and gave evidence yesterday of his rehabilitation as a priest by celebrating high mass in the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Schiller street and South Park avenue. Father Crowley arrived on Thursday last from Washington, where he conferred with Cardinal Martinelli.

CRISIS NEAR FOR ITALY.

Revolutionary Outbreak Is Liable to Occur.

London, March 11.—The grave situation in Italy will reach a critical point to-day. This is the proposed date for the great railway strike and also for the fate of the government in the chamber of deputies. Grave fears of disturbances in the principal cities are entertained, and it is evident that the kingly qualities of the young monarch are about to be put to a sevevre test. The responsibility for dealing with the situation will probably fall directly on his shoulders.

DIVORCE FOR INFANTA.

Eulalie and Don Antonio Suffer Estrangement.

Paris, March 11.—Long standing estrangement that has existed between Infanta Eulalie and Don Antonio is nearing culmination in legal separation. The infanta is now in Paris and process will be begun shortly in French courts. The step contemplated is guarded here with the utmost secrecy, but advices from Madrid leave no room for doubt in the matter.

FILED IN ST. PAUL

GOVERNMENT READY FOR ITS FIGHT AGAINST THE NORTHERN MERGER.

VIOLATION OF SHERMAN LAW

THEORY UPON WHICH THE ATTORNEY GENERAL BASES HIS CASE.

WILL PRESENT FACTS ONLY

MERGER PLANS TO DESTROY COMPETITION IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Washington, March 9. — The suit against the Northern merger will be begun in the United States district court at St. Paul, and the bill prepared by the department of justice has been forwarded to the United States attorney in that district to be filed Monday.

The bill is not a long or complicated one. Attorney General Knox and Solicitor General Richards decided to make the complaint on the organization of the Northern Securities company as in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. They will attempt to show that the organization of this company is in violation of law and for the purpose of

in interstate commerce, because it seeks to take control of all the stock of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern railways. The position of the department of justice is that if the Northern merger is legal all railway combinations and pools will be legal, and there is no way to prevent the consolidation of all the railways in the United States. The attack, therefore, will be on the act of consolidating the stock as an indirect means of consolidating the control of the railways and destroying competition. The bill will not of what has been done toward destroying competition, but present the facts as to the means of defeating the law. If the counsel for the Northern Securities company admit the facts presented in the government bill there may be no long arguments, but the question of law left to the court to secure an early decision and bring it to a final settlement before the supreme court. If the counsel for the merger do not admit the facts and arguments are to be presented, Solicitor General Richards and probably Attorney General Knox will go to St. Paul to take part in the presentation of the government's case.

WAITS FOR THE SHERIFF.

Stearns County Farmer Shoots a Neighbor.

Eden Valley, Minn., March 9.—Robert Charles yesterday was shot twice and mortally wounded by John Herd. The trouble was in the nature of a feud. Charles' crippled brother Jack was living with him a year ago. He ordered the brother to leave. Jack did so, and took up his residence with John Herd. To pay Herd for his keeping during his life Jack Charles deeded Herd a forty-acre farm. On this farm Robert Charles lived. Jack Charles died six months ago. Yesterday morning John Herd and his brother went to the farm for a load of hay. When they arrived Bob Charles appeared with a shotgun and threatened to shoot Herd, when Herd fired two shots from a revolver. Both balls entered Charles' body in the region of the stomach. Charles was taken to a hospital in New Paynesville, where it is said that he cannot recover. Herd came to town after the shooting and told his story. He was advised to go to St. Cloud and give himself up to the sheriff. He started for St. Cloud after dinner, but the roads were so bad that he returned home, where he now is. He has not been arrested, and will not be until Sheriff Schiplin arrives.

CROPS INJURED.

Winter Wheat and Clover Damaged in Wisconsin.

Appleton, Wis., March 9. — The unfavorable weather of the past month has caused considerable anxiety among the farmers of this part of the state who are of the opinion that most of their clover has been killed. The hay crop last year was a very light one, and as a result many of the farmers were compelled to winter less stock than was their custom other years. A large acreage was seeded down last year, and it is this that has suffered greatly from the continued freezing and thawing and from the lack of snow protection during the winter. Hay and oats command a very high price at present.

MEGAARDEN REMOVED.

Van Sant Finds Him Guilty of Offenses Alleged.

Minneapolis, March 9. — Gov. Van Sant has formally removed from office Phil T. Megaarden of Hennepin county, who was suspended several weeks ago pending a hearing of the charges against him. Gov. Van Sant finds Megaarden guilty of malfeasance in office, of collecting illegal fees and of retaining for a time $2,400 of delinquent tax money.

CONGRESS.

Senator Hanna Makes a Speech on the Shipping Bill.

Washington, March 7. — A notable speech was made in the senate yesterday by Mr. Hanna of Ohio on the pending shipping bill, which he discussed from the standpoint of an American business man. His arguments were carefully arranged. He was always forceful and earnest and at times eloquent. He commanded the undivided attention of the senate and of the galleries, and when he closed he received congratulations of many of his colleagues.

Early in the session Mr. Frye, in charge of the pending shipping bill, obtained an agreement that the senate should vote on the measure and all pending amendments at 3 p. m. Monday, March 17.

Before consideration of the shipping bill was resumed an extended debate occurred on the measure providing for the protection of the United States. No action on the bill was taken.

In the House.

The house devoted another day to debate on the bill to classify the rural free delivery service and to place the carriers under contract. Little interest was manifested in the discussion.

THEIR CLAIM THROWN OUT.

Individuality of Seamen in the Navy Merged in the Nation.

Washington, March 8.—The Spanish treaty claims commission yesterday handed down a decision against the claimants for deaths and injuries received by officers and seamen in the wreck of the battleship Maine, in Havana harbor. The commission holds that individual claims of citizens of one nation may arise against the government of another nation for redress of injuries to persons or property which such citizens may have sustained from such government or any of its agents. But such individual claims do not arise in favor of the officers and seamen of a ship of war, who receive, in the line of duty, injuries to their persons for which a foreign government is responsible. The claim against the foreign government is wholly national, and all injuries to such officers and seamen are merged in the national injury; and they can look only to their own government for such remuneration as it may choose to give them.

ATROCIOUS TORTURE.

Hardships in Samar Cause Officers to Deal Fiercely With Filipinos.

Manila, March 8. — A court-martial has been ordered to try Maj. Littleton W. T. Waller and Lieut. John H. A. Day of the marine corps on March 17 next, on the charge of executing natives of the Island of Samar without trial. Some of the circumstances in the case are peculiarly atrocious. One native was tied to a tree and publicly shot in the thigh, the next day he was shot in the arms. The third day he was shot in the body and the fourth day the native was killed. Friends of the two officers attribute their actions to loss of mind, due to the privations which they suffered in the island of Samar.

Washington, March 8.—Gov. William H. Taft, having concluded his testimony before the congressional committees, yesterday left for a visit to his home in Cincinnati. While there he will undergo an operation for the ailment which compelled him to return from the Philippines. His present plan is to return to Washington in about a month for a further conference with the president and the secretary of war and to start back for Manila about the first of May. St. Louis Official Suspected of Attempting Shady Work.

St. Louis, March 8.—A bench warrant was issued yesterday by Judge Ryan for the arrest of John H. Becker, city factory inspector, on the charge of bribery. The warrant, it is said, is based on an alleged attempt to "fix" the special jury that was to try Charles Kratz, a member of the house of delegates indicted by the December grand jury on the charge of bribery.

ANDREE RUMOR DENIED.

Hudson's Bay Company Officials Don't Know He Was Shot.

Winnipeg, March 8. — The Hudson's Bay company deny positively having received any confirmation from their officials in the Far North of the story that Andree was shot by Eskimos on the shores of Hudson's bay. A story to that effect was published two years ago and was traced by the Hudson's Bay officials, but no confirmation of the report has been secured.

Islands That Float

Ocean Currents Carry Away Large Sections of Land

"Of all passengers carried by ocean currents floating islands are the most interesting. Many of them have been found voyaging on the Atlantic. These islands were originally parts of low-lying river banks which broke away under stress of storm or flood and floated out to sea, says Theodore Waters in Ainslee's. The Orinoco, the Amazon, the La Plata and other tropical rivers often send forth such pieces of their shores. Some of the bits of land are of large size and carry animals, insects and vegetation, even, at times, including trees, the roots of which serve to hold the land intact, while their branches and leaves serve as sails for the wind. Generally the waves break up these islands shortly after they put to sea, but sometimes, under favorable conditions, they travel long distances.

"The longest voyage of a floating island, according to government records, took place in 1893. This island was first seen off Florida, and apparently it had an area of two acres. It bore no trees, but it was thickly covered with bushes, and in one place it was thirty feet high above the sea level. It was in the gulf stream, traveling slowly and with occasional undulations to show where the ground swell was working beneath it. Probably it got away from its river anchorage in the spring of the year, for, toward the latter part of July it had reached the latitude of Wilmington, Del. No large animal life had been seen on it, though there must have been myriads of the small creeping things which abound in the tropics. By the end of August it had passed Cape Cod and was veering toward the Grand Banks.

"It followed the steamer lane routes quite accurately, and several vessels reported it. One month later it was in mid-ocean, northwest of the Azores, and its voyage evidently was beginning to tell on it. It was much smaller and less compact. It was not seen again, and probably it met destruction in the October gales. But it had traveled at least 1,000 miles, and if, as was thought, it came from the Orinoco, it must have covered twice that distance. It is quite possible that floating islands, larger than this one, under more favoring circumstances, might during past ages have made the complete journey from America to Europe or Africa, and so brought about a distribution of animal species. Of course, it is not absolutely certain that this island went to pieces in October. It might, though this is not probable, have floated down into the region of calms and seaweed, where it would be longer preserved."

How Senator Perkins Got His Start in Business.

Senator Perkins of California is one of the few members of the United States Senate who could afford to lose $300,000 and then have a balance sufficiently large to purchase a controlling interest in a large ocean steamship company. That, however, is just what he did, but the interesting event took place half a century ago, when he was a merchant in a small California town, during the time that the gold fever was at its height and the "dust" was plentiful.

The Senator had none of the advantages that accrue to most boys of the present day, and when a lad of 12 years he landed in California with nothing but plenty of pluck and determination to begin life's battle for himself. He lost no time in starting out, and managed to secure employment as an errand boy in a grocery store, receiving for his services $30 a month and board. His earnings were carefully laid away, and when an opportunity came to invest them he had a bank account which reached the sum of $800. One day he met a man who operated the ferry across a nearby stream and learned that the boat had gone aground on a sandbar.

Disheartened over his failure to get the boat off, the man was anxious to sell out the business, and young Perkins was quick to see an opening for embarking on his own account.

"How much would you take for the boat as it lies?" asked Perkins.

"A thousand dollars, and not a cent less," was the reply.

Perkins closed the bargain on the spot, agreeing to pay the money before sundown. Going to the bank, he drew out his savings, and instead of returning to work spent the afternoon in visiting every store along the business street of which the town boasted, borrowing money to make up the balance. From one business man he secured $45, but in most instances he was only able to negotiate small loans, and even now he remembers that every 50-cent piece was a welcome addition to his pile; but he had the satisfaction of obtaining the needed amount, and was the owner of the boat before he went to bed.

His new investment was nonproductive for a long time, as it took him three months to cut away the sandbar, as he was obliged to do the work himself. He never lost heart, however, and his natural business acumen is shown by the fact that after operating the ferry for only a few months he was able to sell out for $3,000.—Washington Post.

World's Greatest Monarch.

San Blas Indians Have an Exalted Opinion of Their Ruler.

"The Mormon explorer's reference to the San Blas Indians, in an interview printed in a local paper, was of great interest to me," said a well-known physician of Galveston, Texas. "I happened to have some knowledge of the curious people myself. Just after I left college I took a trip to South America for the purpose of studying fevers, and I had several encounters with the San Blas. There are no more curious people in the world than these presumptive, self-sufficient, stubborn Indians. During a sojourn of several months in the vicinity of their reservation I was able to converse with only one of their number. He was an old fellow who had made several trips to New York on a steamship and who had picked up a little English in his wanderings. He assured me that the king of the San Blas—that is the title given to their ruler—was the greatest monarch that ever sat upon a throne.

"From the general run of his talk I saw that the San Blas looked upon the rest of the world with pity and contempt. They have a great horror of any other race mingling with theirs. They guard their women closely that no marriages with aliens be possible. In fact I learned there were few persons in the vicinity that ever saw a San Blas girl after she was 8 years old. The king very naively boasts that although his people absolutely forbid any trespassing on their lands, that no one had ever been shot in the back by his warriors. This would indicate a high sense of honor, but it is further explained that when a stranger is assassinated from ambush, his murderers first whistle to him from the rear, and just as he turns, shoot him to death. This is certainly droll, and a peculiar way to ease the conscience, as I suppose it is calculated to do. I would not be surprised if some day an organized party of Americans with a hatred for vanities were to invade the San Blas reservation, and force the Indians to extend the welcome hand to the outside world, with which they maintain a perpetual defensive and often offensive war."

LIQUOR AND CORKS IN RUSSIA.

Government Has Monopoly on Manufacture of Both.

Since the Russian government has taken the control of the liquor traffic in that country the excise department of the ministry of finance, which has charge of the state alcohol monopoly, has been having trouble with the manufacturers of corks. The latter attempted to form a trust against the government in order to compel it to accept exorbitant prices. The attempt failed, and the government determined, in order to avoid similar recurrences, to open a cork factory of its own. The results afforded by tests made on a small scale and under unfavorable circumstances have proved satisfactory. The yearly consumption of the Russian excise department is about six billion of corks. Thus it did not take the Russian government many days to knock out a cork trust, and now that government has a monopoly on corks. As some of the largest cork factories in the world are in the United States, and as Yankee ingenuity and American experience have devised improved machinery for the production of corks, there is a splendid opportunity for manufacturers to sell such machinery to Russia.

What a Woman Photographer Sees.

A woman photographer, who gives as much thought to each portrait she makes as any portrait painter, says that she has a peculiar feeling in peering through the camera of looking into the souls of the sitters. Some people are able to stand this, and she likes them better after they have been put to the test, while others she does not like as well. She sees what the untouched photograph often reveals, the true character of the sitter unsoftened by color and with all the lines exaggerated. The portrait painter frequently reveals characteristics in a portrait which the world has never suspected in the subject.—New York Times.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XX—(Continued.)

Nugent Leathwood had ceased to swing his leg; he was sitting perfectly still, with his eyes fixed on Gilbert Rickerby, and with his breath laboring as though he had been running.

"I sent that servant into this house; I saw him enter the gate myself. That was not sent to personate me, but merely as my ambassador—to tell you that I was coming. I wanted to hear what your reception of the news of what I meant to do would be. The man entered the house, as I have said; he never came out again. Jemima Veevers, tell this man what you saw on the night James Holden came to the house with my message and my money."

Nugent Leathwood started then, and turned swiftly towards the old woman; whatever else he might have been dimly prepared for, he certainly was not prepared for this. There was, too, a certain curious alertness about the old woman—a gleam in her dull eyes that he had never seen there before.

"I 'ad bin in the 'abit of wanderin' about the 'ouse—both 'ouses, in fact—night an' day, for a long time," began the old woman. "I think I got into the way of it first w'en my poor mistress was alive. I used to creep about then, an' watch the old man, so as to tell 'er wot 'e looked like, an' to assure 'er that 'e was well; she was always cravin' to know that; I'd 'eard Cornelius an' 'is master talkin', that lay, about my dear boy comin' 'ome; I 'eard 'em whisperin' about what they meant to do—but I couldn't quite catch what they said."

"You Jezebel!" said Nugent, through his teeth. "I told you, Cornelius, mischief would come of that woman lurking about the house. You said she had no wits—didn't you?"

"I 'ad wits enough to be able to get the best of you," retorted to old woman. "An' I wanted to see my dear boy" (how her face changed and softened as she said it and as she glanced at Gilbert!), "an' I waited about on the stairs and in dark corners, on the chance of catching first sight of 'im. Then, when the ring came at the bell, and the man was brought in, I saw at once that it wasn't Master Gilbert at all, but a stranger. I was jest turnin' away w'en I 'eard a frightful noise in the room, and I ran back to the door; I peeped in, an' there I saw Mr. Leathwood an' the strange man fightin' like demons all over the floor, an' Cornelius an' the man they call Probyn lookin' on."

A dead silence was in the room as the old woman paused for a moment; Nugent took out his handkerchief and hurriedly wiped his forehead and the palms of his hands. Mr. Reeks had backed against the wall up in a corner, and stood there with his mouth wide open and his tufts of hair bristling with fright.

"It grows interesting, doesn't it, Cousin Leathwood?" asked Gilbert, quietly.

"Yes; very interesting for you," replied Leathwood, with a snarl. "But the story is not finished yet; pray proceed."

"I was too much frightened," went on Jemima, "to know what to do—too much afraid even to cry out. But I watched the whole time, while they strangled 'im; I was 'idin' on the stairs, in the dark, w'en they carried the body out—Mr. Leathwood and Cornelius."

"It's a lie!" cried Cornelius, fiercely. "You shan't drag me into the business."

"Oh, but they shall, though," said Nugent, quickly. "We're both in this, my old friend; you won't leave me in the lurch; I'll take good care of that. They've got to prove all they say; but, under the circumstances, we stand or fall together; don't forget that."

"I don't know what they did with the man they killed; I was too frightened to wait any longer," added Jemima.

"I think I'll take up the story again," said Gilbert. "That body was carried into the deserted house next to this; was thrust, in the hurry and terror of the moment, into a cupboard. For a little time fortune favored those who had committed the crime; a man whom I have since learned bore the name of Miles Probyn, probably frightened at what he had seen, rushed—half-mad with terror—out of the house. I saw him—followed him. He it was who was killed in the streets, and dying with the name of the man he thought had been murdered on his lips, was buried under that name. Oh, it was a clever scheme, Nugent Leathwood; and if you had really killed Gilbert Rickerby, it is probable that the fraud would never have been discovered."

Nugent Leathwood, even in this hour, took the matter coolly enough, or appeared to do so. "I'm obliged to admit," he said, "that you've got the whole thing pretty pat—whether you've invented it or guessed at it, or what you've done. There's one thing that puzzles me: where have you been hiding all this time?"

"As I have said—within a dozen yards of you," replied Gilbert; "in the deserted house, where I lived as a boy—and where my mother died. This faithful old woman"—he indicated Jemima Veevers—"has waited upon me in secret, during the few days I have been there. You have been outwitted, Cousin Leathwood, at every turn."

"I'm afraid you take too much for granted, Cousin Rickerby," retorted Nugent. "It is not, perhaps, worth mentioning—a mere detail; but you have spoken of the body of a man stowed away in a cupboard. The story of the murder is probably some mad fancy of this poor old woman's; but the business of the cupboard is a little too thin. Doubtless, you can find the body, and confirm your statement?"

"Oh, yes—I can find the body," replied Gilbert; "but not in the place in which you put it."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that I buried the body of my servant in the garden of this house, on the night when you nearly surprised us at the work—the night on which the man Hubbard seized hold of you by mistake. Do you remember that?"

"Yes, I remember it." Nugent Leathwood got down from the table, and stood, with his arms folded, gloomily staring at the floor. After a moment or two he raised his head, and spoke, with a certain recklessness in his tones: "Well—you've trapped me—and I hope you are satisfied. I've made a pretty good fight for it—but the laugh is with you, at last. What are you going to do?"

It must not be supposed for a moment that a man of the character of Nugent Leathwood meant to be beaten quite so easily. Even while he spoke, and while his careless eyes drifted around the room, his mind was going carefully over every loophole of escape—now here, now there. Remorse for anything he had done was not in him; put him face to face with Gilbert Rickerby alone, and he would kill him now, if possible, as readily as he had plotted to kill him before.

"I intend to hand you over to justice," replied Gilbert. "It has taken me a long time to get the story pieced together; it may be difficult for me to establish the truth as to who I really am, but I'll do it. As for you—you shan't escape—be sure of that."

Leathwood shrugged his shoulders. "No; I expect you've got me pretty tight," he said. In his own mind he had settled pretty clearly what he was to do—had seen a way out of this thing. "But, since you've won," he added, "grant me a favor."

"What is it?"

"I am quite capable of taking on my own shoulders the burden of anything I have done," said Leathwood. "I spoke just now of dragging this unfortunate old man—merely a tool in my hands—into the business. That was wrong; I frankly admit it. There—I'll confess, if you like, that I killed this servant of yours, believing the man was Gilbert Rickerby. It's done, and I must pay the price. But this old man should not be punished for the fault of his master; let him go."

Cornelius appeared quite to indorse this opinion; he looked expectantly at Gilbert. "I am, really, a very old man, Mr. Rickerby," he whined, "and I 'ave a wife to think of—"

"You haven't thought much of her hitherto," said Gilbert; "but, for her sake, you may go, as far as I am concerned; what the law will say to you afterwards I don't know."

Nugent Leathwood was visibly affected by this concession; he walked across the room and seized his old servant by the hand. "I am sorry, Cornelius," he said, aloud, "that I ever dragged you into such an affair as this. Forgive me." Then, under his breath, in a hurried whisper: "Get the old woman away; leave me alone with him; I'll settle him yet." Then, aloud: "You will forgive me, won't you?"

Cornelius took his cue as neatly as it was given. "Don't speak of it, Mr. Leathwood," he said, in a voice of emotion. "I 'ave bin wrong, I know, an' it's me as ought to ask for forgiveness." Then, in the same cautious whisper: "I understand. I'm ready for anything."

Nugent walked back to the table. "Again it occurs to me, cousin, that our friend, Mr. Reeks, here, may get into some difficulty if he is included, however innocently, in the matter. He has been amply rewarded for any trouble or annoyance caused to him; he has in his possession £500 of your money. Let him go; let him benefit by it. We don't want to drag the poor fellow into such a business as this. For Heaven's sake, cousin, let you and I face the business together; after all, call me what you will, I'm a man, and I won't sneak behind anyone weaker than myself. Let Mr. Reeks go ababout his business with his money."

"Upon my word, cousin, you're a better fellow than I gave you credit for, and I heartily wish I hadn't such a task before me," sad Gilbert. "Let Mr. Reeks go, by all means."

Mr. Reeks was only too glad to avail himself of the permission. He felt that the matter was ended; he knew that in his pocket was the sum of money which was to give him his chance of starting in the world afresh. He picked up his hat with alacrity and went smilingly towards the door.

"Much obliged to you, I'm sure, gentlemen, he murmured. "I could only wish that, for the sake of all parties, something could be done as would restore harmony; but still, you know, Mr. Leathwood, it ain't allowed, in a Christian country, to go choking one's fellow-creatures, no matter what the motive may be. Good evening, gentlemen."

It was the turn of Cornelius to play his part. With seeming timidity, he approached Jemima—shuffling towards her hesitatingly and with a certain apologetic air.

"I know I 'aven't been the 'usband I might 'ave been, Mrs. V.," he said; "but it can all be made up for. These gentlemen have bin good enough to give me another chance—an' you shall see what use I'll make of it. I'll do my best, Jemima—if you'll overlook the mistakes I 'ave made."

Jemima was absolutely knocked off her mental balance, so to speak, for this extraordinary and unlooked-for attitude on the part of Cornelius. She had no time or opportunity to discover whether he was genuine or not; the wily old man took her tenderly by the arm and walked her out of the room, apparently murmuring unaccustomed endearments. The door closed after them, and Nugent Leathwood and his cousin were left alone.

There was a long silence—a silence which Leathwood broke. "I would like to know," he began, in a humbled voice, "what has become of the young girl—Olive Mallory, whom I have wronged so deeply, and who was the indirect cause of all this business. Is she safe?"

"Quite safe," replied Gilbert. "In fact, she is here now. I brought her here with me, when I followed you back from Barnet; I would not leave her alone again. When I have seen about you I shall take her away from this dreadful place with me. By the way—where are those papers which Reeks brought here?"

"At your feet, where you dropped them when you first came in behind me," replied Nugent, carelessly. But his voice was the only careless thing him; the whole man was alert to seize the first opportunity that presented itself.

Gilbert Rickerby glanced around, and then stooped to pick up the papers at his feet. The opportunity had come. Like lightning Leathwood snatched up a small, heavy, bronze statuette, which stood on the desk, swung it aloft and brought it down with crashing force on the head of the stooping man. With a groan, Gilbert Rickerby plunged forward with outstretched hands and fell on his face on the floor.

Nugent Leathwood laughed as he dropped his weapon and went down on one knee beside the prostrate man. "So the story is finished, is it, Gilbert Rickerby?" he whispered. "You are so sure of yourself and of what you can do that you venture back into this place and bring this girl with you. That's kind of you to bring the girl. Well, this is the second killing of Gilbert Rickerby; but I'll make sure of it this time!"

He bent lower—rolled the body over—and looked keenly at the unconscious face. There was no sign of life in it. In a breathless hurry he sprang up and ran out of the room, leaving Gilbert Rickerby lying there.

CHAPTER XXI.

Cornelius Meets His Match.

When Mr. George Reeks hurried away from his house in Little Pond Street, Camden Town, on that eventful night, he left Mrs. Reeks in a state of the greatest possible flutter and alarm. In the first place, the good lady was as heartily tired of the difficulties which had been her lot during the whole time of her association with Mr. Reeks as was that gentleman himself—and the £500 was a tempting amount. It spelled good fare and good clothes; every coin of it rang a knell to brokers and duns forever. But, on the other hand, Mrs. Reeks continued to be assailed by those pricks of conscience which had stirred into life on the previous day.

She bitterly regretted that that strange lodger had ever entered the house; she would have given much to have got back to the days when little George Reeks struggled on to earn two shillings here, or half a crown there, as commission for mysterious sales and other things when they were desperately poor, indeed, but when their hands were clean and mystery had never spread cloudy wings over their house.

More than all, the wifely feelings of Mrs. Reeks were roused at the thought of danger to her husband; in her mental vision she saw him pursued by a gigantic policeman; she even had a vision of him with the £500 in his hands, tripped up by footpads, or brutally assaulted by highway robbers. In an agony of dread and contrition she paced the house from top to bottom, counting the slow minutes until her husband should appear.

The time wore on, and grew into the small hours of the morning; and still the little street failed to echo to the brisk footsteps of Mr. George Reeks. At last Mrs. Reeks, wound up to a pitch of absolute desperation by her terrors, could stand it no longer; she hurriedly put on a cloak and bonnet and sallied out to find him, and, if possible, to give him safe conduct home.

"I always said I ought to have been the man," muttered Mrs. Reeks to herself, as she sped along through the silent streets. "I'd like to see them get anything out of me in a hurry! But, there—George always was that weak, anyone could twist him round their fingers."

Whether Mrs. Reeks meant to suggest that she had carried out that twisting process successfully on her own account, she did not say. She set her face straight for Rickerby's Folly and made for it at a great rate. As she went along, memories of that other occasion on which she had gone to the same place in search of her husband swept over her, an unworthy suspicion assailed her—that the little man might have been detained on another of those Quixotic affairs connected with a young and forlorn female; the thought of it tightened the lips of Mrs. Reeks and increased her speed.

Coming in the dead of that strange night to the outside of Rickerby's Folly, Mrs. Reeks suddenly grew cautious. She remembered that on the last occasion she had failed to find her husband simply because she had gone, in a straightforward manner, to the house and asked for him; on this occasion she determined to make whatever search was necessary on her own account.

There was a wild thought in her mind that she might be able to scale the wall, if no one came along to catch her in the act. Perhaps there was a spice of romance hidden away somewhere in the breast of Mrs. Reeks; perhaps she ought, as she had said, to have been of that stronger sex to which nature had denied her admission. However, being, after all, a practical woman of the nineteenth century, she thought it possible that a way in might be found by the gate, although, as she had heard it unlocked on the previous occasion, that seemed scarcely likely.

But, fortunately or unfortunately, for Mrs. Reeks, it had happened that the opening of the gate that night had been left to Jemima, and that wise old woman, being uncertain as to what would happen, or how necessary it might be for someone to make a rapid exit from the place, had omitted to turn the key. So that Mrs. Reeks, after fumbling for a moment or two at the latch, felt the gate yield under her touch, and slipped quickly through into the garden.

At this point Mrs. Reeks found herself in a strange land; she knew not whether to turn to right or to left—was equally uncertain as to whether or not her husband's mission had failed or succeeded, and what her reception might be if she walked boldly up to the house. But once again that romantic streak in her character saved her; she thought of all the heroines of whom she had read who crept about in dark places (usually in gorgeous evening raiment) and stabbed or hissed their way successfully through countless dangers. With her heart beating somewhat tumultuously Mrs. Reeks crept towards the dark outline of the house without any very distinct notion as to where she was going.

A light shone in one window, and presently, while she looked, Mrs. Reeks saw a shadow fall across the window and a man stretch forth his arms at either side and close the shutters, leaving even that face of the house absolutely blank. More than ever disturbed in her mind with fears as to the fate of Mr. Reeks, the good lady stumbled along among the dead leaves until she touched the wall of the house; then, in the pitchy darkness, she began to grope along the bricks, in the hope of finding the door.

To do her justice, Mrs. Reeks was no coward, and it is probable that she feared nothing absolutely mortal. More than all else, she was nerved by the thought of that unfortunate little husband of hers in that strange house, undergoing, perhaps, unknown horrors for the sake of that horrible £500. Just as Mrs. Reeks reached that point of thought she touched a door, felt, feverishly, for the handle, and tumbled through into a passage.

Darkness and silence. The door had closed with a soft thud behind her, and Mrs. Reeks knew not which way to turn or whether it was safe to advance a step. Indeed, it is probable that at that moment she would have screamed aloud had she not seen, straight in front of her, a gleam of light. Hurrying towards it, she thrust open a door, and found herself in a room with a lighted candle on the table. The room was empty.

"Now, I wonder where poor George has got to," she panted, looking wildly all around her. "Two doors—one up in the corner, one to the right. Well, I think I'll trust to luck, and take the one to the right."

Mrs. Reeks caught up the candlestick, pulled open the door to the right, and found herself in a narrow passage. As a matter of fact, it was the passage that connected the two houses, and Mrs. Reeks, in darting along it, as she now did, was passing into that house in which Nugent Leathwood had lived and in which Gilbert Rickerby had that night been struck down. Mrs. Reeks knew nothing of this; she only knew that she was in the same house to which her husband had come that night, and that she meant to find him.

Carrying the candle, she passed through the passage and came to the second house. All was dark and silent. Not a whisper nor a footfall anywhere. And then, in the midst of the silence, cutting like a flash of steel, came the faint scream of a woman.

Mrs. Reeks, being a woman herself, dropped the candlestick and felt inclined to scream, if only as a species of friendly echo. The next moment, as the cry was repeated, all that was best in her was roused, and she ran forward blindly in the darkness, plunged headlong, with all her substantial weight, against a door, and fell forward into a room.

The room was lighted, too, although the shutters were closed; and there were two people in it. The first person that Mrs. Reeks noticed, when she scrambled up from her knees, was a young girl, drawn back against the wall, and staring, with frightened eyes, at the other occupant of the room—an old man of a curiously bent and twisted figure—the man Mrs. Reeks remembered to have seen at the gate when she came to Rickerby's Folly, in search of her husband, on the former occasion. The old man swung round upon the unceremonious visitor, snarling at her like a sort of wild beast.

"Well—what do you want?" he growled. "Who sent you blunderin' in 'ere like this?"

"I've come to look—to look for my husband—Mr. Reeks," panted Mrs. Reeks. "What are you doing with that young lady?"

"What's that to you?" snapped Cornelius. "Your 'usband went from 'ere a good 'alf-hour ago, an' with five 'undred cash in 'is 'ands—muh more than 'e deserved, the dog, by a lot. You'd better follow 'im, an' not come forcin' your way into 'onest folks' 'ouses at this hour of the mornin'. Come, be off with you!"

But Mrs. Reeks, quite unexpectedly, stood her ground. "Not much!" she exclaimed, resolutely. "I believe this is the young lady I did a wrong to (though goodness knows I never meant it!) a day or two back. What's the matter with her now I heard her cry out a minute ago."

"Well, an' if you did? It's one of the ways of gels to squeak," said Cornelius, with an ugly grin. "Look 'ere, my good woman, you'd better git out of this as soon as you can. My master'll be back in a minute or two, an' 'e ain't in the best of tempers jus' now."

"That for you master!" cried Mrs. Reeks, snapping her fingers in front of his face. "I don't care for forty masters; but I won't stand by and see a young girl ill-treated by an ugly old sinner like you. Stand out of my way!"

Mrs. Reeks, with one swift movement of her arm, swept the astonished Mr. Veevers almost off his feet, and crossed swiftly to where Olive was crouched against the wall. Something in the strong, defiant face must have attracted the girl, for she sprang forward with a low cry of relief and caught Mrs. Reeks around the neck.

"There—there—my pretty; don't be upset!" murmured the good woman. "I was a beast to you the other night, and I doubt if I'll ever be forgiven for turning a young girl out of doors and giving her into the hands of a scoundrel; but you needn't fret any more. He's got to be a strong man who'll take you away from me now; and he's got to be a better man than any of your shrivelled-up Guy Fawkses—that I can tell you!"

"Gilbert—take me to Gilbert!" cried the girl, clinging frantically to Mrs. Reeks. "I have been so happy with him; but now he's gone, and I cannot find him. Take me to Gilbert!"

"And you ain't likely to find 'im," broke in the old man. "We've 'ad enough of your Gilberts and what-not; it's time you knew the truth about it. You won't see Gilbert Rickerby again—take my word for that. Come, now; do as I've told you; get on your 'at and your cloak, and be ready to leave this place at once. And as for you"—he turned fiercely on Mrs. Reeks, and shook a fist at her—"if you don't get out of this place at once, you'll be hundled out, neck and crop, before you know where you are. And 'eaven 'elp you if Mr. Leathwood comes back and finds you 'ere!"

"I don't care for Mr. Leathwood or for you," retorted Mrs. Reeks. "I'm going fast enough, but I don't go without this young lady. She's frightened to death of you. anyone can see that. Now, stand aside, and let me pass!"

"Oh, no, you won't pass unless you go alone," replied Cornelius, with a grin. "A pretty thing, indeed, if you might come into a gentleman's 'ouse at this time of night, and carry off a young gel who isn't even in 'er right mind."

"I'm not surprised at that, if she's had much to do with you," retorted Mrs. Reeks, sharply. Now, look here, my friend, you're an old man, and I don't want to do you an injury. But I'm a woman, and I wouldn't leave a dog in your care, to judge by the look of you, let alone a young girl. So, stand aside, or I'll rouse the neighborhood, even at this time of night, in a fashion that'll surprise you!"

For answer, Mr. Veevers turned suddenly turned and darted across the room, pulled open an old portmanteau, burrowed among the contents, and stood up with something in his hand. "Lucky I packed this," he muttered. "I brought the bag in 'ere so's to be ready w'en Leathwood was. Now, my good woman, I don't like to threaten a lady, but will you go now? I kept this because one never knows what may 'appen w'en one is running away an' leavin' awkward things be'ind."

He held in his hand a heavy, old-fashioned revolver—held it awkwardly, as though he knew very little about it. Mrs. Reeks knew still less about such things, but she realized fully, probably for the first time in her life, that they were remarkably dangerous things. She pulled the girl's arms from her neck and darted at once upon Mr. Veevers.

Some instinct of nature prompts the inexperienced in moments of danger to shut their eyes and rush blindly at what threatens them. So with Mrs. Reeks. She grabbed Cornelius and clung to him, with her eyes tightly shut, and fumbled and struggled for the deadly thing he held. And in the midst of that struggling and fumbling there came a terrific report, and Mrs. Reeks felt herself clutched, swayed about, and dragged to the floor.

(To Be Continued.)

Flirting Frowned On.

The saying that "all the world loves a lover" is a rule with some important exceptions.

In some parts of Russia, for instance, it is a crime for lovers to kiss in public. Two amorous couples were arrested in Odessa not long ago for this iniquitous conduct. The crime was committed in a restaurant, where the young people had been dining, and the punishment was a short term of imprisonment.

It seems strange to have to link with Russia in this respect the free country under the Stars and Stripes. But it is a mournful fact that in some parts of the great republic lovers are frowned upon.

Several towns there have enactments against courting in public, and many an Edwin with his Angelina has been haled before the court and fined for "billing and cooing." In one case, seven young men were prosecuted for flirting with the lady students of a local college. These desperate criminals, however, were let off on payment of costs and an apology.

What curmudgeons some of the authorities are may be judged by the fact that at one popular resort is a notice board with the words, "Flirting Is Prohibited."—Cassell's Magazine.

The Obtuse English Again.

Two Englishmen were discussing with Mark Twain the old topic of American humor as not appreciated by foreigners.

"But, are the English really so obtuse?" asked one of them.

"Obtuse! You can't get an idea into an Englishman's head with a surgical operation," declared Mark Twain.

The questioner remained in solemn thought for a moment. Then he broke into a hearty laugh.

"Quite a delicious joke!" he exclaimed "Though, of course, if you were to open the Englishman's skull you would kill him, would you not?"

Mark Twain turned to the second Englishman. "What did I tell you? He wants to know whether it would kill him!"

The countenance of the second Englishman was like a blank wall. "Wouldn't it?" he queried.—New York Times.

Making Lemons Sour.

How often does a lemon fail to live up to its sour reputation! Until lately American lemons were more likely to thus fail than foreign ones, the reason of which was that our growers did not know how to cure lemons. The fruit was never tart enough. There would be plenty of juice, but it contained a high per cent of sugar and a small per cent of acid, which made it unmarketable. But a few years ago the lemon growers clubbed together and sent experts over to Italy and Spain to learn the business, and now they are producing much better results. They pick the fruit before it begins to turn yellow and put it in a curing house, where it is kept at an even temperature of about 50 degrees for about twenty days, which "sweats out" all the sugar. It is then removed to another temperature for sixty days more before it is ready for market.

The "Petticoat Insurrection."

Perhaps the first "woman's rights" movement in America was connected with the early history of the settlement of Louisiana, for there, early in the century, occurred the famous "petticoat insurrection." The French girls who had come to settle in the country under allurements which proved to be deceptive, were particularly indignant at being fed upon corn. Bienville thus reports the matter in one of his dispatches:

"The males in the colony begin, through habit, to be reconciled to corn as an article of nourishment; but the females, who are mostly Parisians, have for this kind of food a dogged aversion, which has not yet been subdued. Hence, they inveigh bitterly against his grace, the bishop of Quebec, who, they say, has enticed them away from home under pretext of sending them to enjoy the milk and honey of the land of promise."—Peterson's Magazine.

Grandfather's.

"Do all old people have rheumatism, grandpa?"

"No, dear; rheumatism has all old people."—Indianapolis News.

Drawbacks, Indeed.

"What are the drawbacks of winter?" asked the visiting trustees in the village school, and every pupil responded:

"Mustard plasters, sir."—Chicago Press.

A Convict Makes Silver Dollars.

A convict, employed in the boiler room, succeeded in perfecting a die for making silver dollars without detection, and was distributing them through outside accomplices. The officials were about as much surprised at this discovery as the person who receives a substitute article in place of the genuine Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the only sure cure for indigestion, dyspepsia, constipation and biliousness. Don't fail to try it. Our Private Die Stamp is over the neck of the bottle.

Miles Scroggins' First Effort.

Miles Scroggins was more than fifty years old, noted for his droll wit and funny sayings, but had never attempted to make a speech. All the members of his club believed he could speak if he would try, and frequently attempted to have him make the effort.

It was finally determined to compel him to speak. So, upon the assembling of the club, he was called upon, and, declining to comply, the boys grabbed him and forcibly placed him upon a table, amidst the cheers of the crowd. To the astonishment of all, he manifested great embarrassment. The crowd continued to yell, and finally he broke forth as follows:

"Ladies and Gentlemen—Oh, I beg your pardon, there are no ladies present, and d—d few gentlemen, if any."

After this sally, the curiosity of the crowd was satisfied, and no further effort was made to have Scroggins make a speech.—Buffalo Courier.

Cause and Effect.

"John," she said to her husband, who was grumbling over his breakfast, "your love has grown cold."

"No, it hasn't!" he snapped, "but my breakfast has."

"That's just it. If your love hadn't grown cold, you wouldn't notice that your breakfast had."—Philadelphia Press.

MUSCULAR SORENESS.

As the result of over-exertion and exposure to heat and cold, or from whatever cause, may be treated successfully by the timely application of St. Jacob's Oil. A thorough rubbing is necessary. The Oil should be applied vigorously, for at least twenty minutes, two or three times daily, when all pain, soreness, stiffness will be removed in twenty-four hours. It will also strengthen and harden the muscles. Football players, gymnasts, and all athletes will find St. Jacob's Oil superior to any other remedy for outward application, for the reason that its action is more rapid and its effect permanent. Thousands of people all over the world use and recommend St. Jacob's Oil for muscular soreness. A twenty-five cent bottle is quite sufficient to prove its efficacy. In cases where muscular soreness is complicated with any disease which requires an alterative, Vogeler's Curative Compound should be taken. This is prepared by the proprietors of St. Jacob's Oil, Baltimore, Md., who will send a sample free on application.

How It Was Done.

"I'll match you," said the sporty girl, "to tell whether I'll accept you or not."

"Alas," replied the foxy suitor, "you are more than a match for me."

Thus, by this compliment, he won her.—Chicago Post.

Albums New and Old.

What is nowadays called an album is a book for photographs, stamps, post cards, drawings, autographs, and so forth. But in ancient times, among the Romans, it meant something very different. It was really the notice board, upon which public rules and regulations and the like were written for the guidance and information of the citizens, and was made of some white material—hence the name (albus, Latin, white). A heavy penalty was laid upon any person who disfigured it or played pranks with the letters. In the middle ages the word came to mean a list or register of saints, soldiers and so forth, and on the continent it is still used to describe the catalogue of the names of members of universities and high schools.

Taking High Ground.

The Up-to-Date Baby.

It isn't correct any more to have things daintily pretty. It is no longer the proper thing to swathe the little body in yards and yards of muslin and lace, and put him in bed with billows of down and silk, perfumed with rose or violet. Up-to-date mothers no longer vie with each other on the point of delicate elaboration. They do not vie any more at all. Their one object is to make everything as sanitary ad comfortable as possible for the newcomer. Sometimes they give a sigh for the pretty bow or frill of lace, but, after all, everything in the new fashion looks so clean and sensible and wholesome, they come to see the other was only a perverted taste, and take no pleasure in it. Things have advanced in the last few years. The nursery is one of them. —Woman's Home Companion.

"Nine boxes of this remedy cured me completely, and I feel it my duty to my fellow women to make this statement.

"I can heartily recommend them to any woman suffering with Kidney and Bladder Ailments."

SUCCESS IN BEGGING

STREET MENDICANTS WHO MAKE THEIR WORK AN ART.

Some Net as Much as $50 a Day—Average Income Is Much More Than Can Be Made by Working at a Trade.

"It requires something more than nerve to be a successful beggar," said the old crippled man. "The asking for alms is the least part of the profession. People think because we ask every passerby for something that we expect each to contribute. This is the reverse of the story. We know pretty well as soon as a man or a woman heaves in sight whether we can look for a lift or not. We study humanity. We get so we can tell from the face what the inclination of the person is. As not every cynic looks sour, so every beneficent person does not wear his or her heart on her sleeve. In fact, we get more from the sour-looking people than from those who are gay. Those who are gay are usually broke, and if they are not they are too busy figuring on having a good time with their money to help a beggar out.

"Business men are generally easy marks, because they would rather give up than be detained with the harrowing details of how the arm or leg or eye was lost in a terrible wreck. Grab one when he is in a hurry, and he will part with a coin nine times out of ten rather than miss the engagement, even if it be a lunch appointment. Children, contrary to general belief, are poor givers. In the first place, their nickels are few and far between as a rule, and in the next place they are usually in a rush to get to the nearest candy store and spend it. Women, too, pass us by. Whether they expect the men to do all the giving, or whether they dread contact with suffering, I know not, but I do know that few women contribute.

"But by far the bulk of the money which is given to beggars comes from the middle classes, and this, perhaps, is due to their knowledge of, and acquaintance with suffering themselves. Most of them have had more of the ups and downs than come to the very rich, and they have a fellow feeling for us. They are the ones who stop and listen to the story we have fixed up. We reach them at once, and very rarely fail to land them.

"By the way, if the man is a good artist at his story and knows the game, begging is not such an unprofitable business after all. As a means of earning a living it beats several of the trades all hollow. The proceeds do not seem large to the casual observer, but when you figure up at the end of a day a beggar who cannot average from $7 to $10 a day is not a good hand at the business. I have made as much as $20 a day for months at a time. My family lived well, and I managed to do so at the same time. During gala days and carnival times we sometimes clean up as much as $50 a day. It has run higher than that. The big crowds now in the city have helped things considerably. All of the visitors have money, they have come here to spend it and if it does not go one way it will another, and so they turn it loose without a struggle. A man cannot be proud and be a beggar, but he can sometimes afford to put his pride in his pocket for a while if he is making money. When he has the money he will find that his pride is all right."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Certainly Explanatory.

A friend of mine, a Greek professor, who runs over here for his holidays, is with us now. He got over-excited the other day when the telegrams came from Athens about the shindy over some new translations of the evangelical books. "Your people," I said to him, "seem to be "Fighting like devils for reconciliation,

And hating each other for the love of God."

That launched him into a torrent of explanations and I had such a Niagara of words poured over me for 20 minutes that I began eagerly to watch for a chance of changing the subject. It came at last. "The Greek language," he said, by way of interlude before branching out again into theology, "is a very exact language. We can express our thoughts and ideas with the most exact nicety." "Then tell me," I said, "what you think of Egypt. "In this beautiful country," he answered, "you have an apotheosis of nature and an apodeiknuesis of theopratic omnipotence." I think I must relearn English from a Greek professor. Anglo-Saxon is played out.—Cairo (Egypt) Sphinx.

That Coronation Visit.

The gossip about Miss Alice Roosevelt and the coronation of King Edward calls to mind that President Van Buren's son attended the coronation of Queen Victoria," said Mr. Frank N. Lesly, of Saratoga, N. Y. "I have been particularly interested in the talk regarding Miss Roosevelt's rank. The rumor that she could go by the title of 'princess' would be worthy of consideration had her father named her as envoy from this country. As it is, she will have to be just a plain American girl. When Van Buren's son, John Van Buren, attended Victoria's coronation, he was the special embassy, and was given the title of 'Prince John.' That, of course, was a different situation. Incidentally that title had a great deal to do with his father's defeat for another term as president. The people got the idea into their heads that he had become a plutocrat, and the idea didn't jibe with their domestic sentiments."—Washington Post.

CONGRESSMAN HOWARD.

Of National Reputation Are the Men Who Recommend Pe-ru-na to Fellow Sufferers.

A Remarkable Case Reported From the State of New York.

CONGRESSMAN HOWARD, OF ALABAMA.

House of Representatives, Washington, Feb. 4, 1899. The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio:

Gentlemen—"I have taken Peruna now for two weeks and find I am very much relieved. I feel that my cure will be permanent. I have also taken it for la grippe, and I take pleasure in recommending Peruna as an excellent remedy to all fellow sufferers."

M. W. HOWARD.

Congressman Howard's home address is Fort Payne, Ala.

MOST people think catarrh is a disease confined to the head and nose. Nothing is farther from the truth. It may be that the nose and throat is the oftenest affected by catarrh, but if this is so it is so only because these parts are more exposed to the vicissitudes of the climate than the other parts of the body.

Every organ, every duct, every cavity of the human body is liable to catarrh. A multitude of ailments depend on catarrh. This is true winter and summer. Catarrh causes many cases of chronic disease, where the victim has not the slightest suspicion that catarrh has anything to do with it.

The following letter which gives the experience of Mr. A. C. Lockhart is a case in point:

Mr. A. C. Lockhart, corner Cottage St. and Thurston Road, Rochester, N. Y., in a letter written to Dr. Hartman, says the following of Peruna:

"About fifteen years ago I commenced to be ailing, and consulted a physician. He pronounced my trouble a species of dyspepsia' and [illegible] treated me about six [illegible] absence from my business [illegible] country. I did so and got [illegible] back to work again, [illegible] distressing pains in my [illegible] of the bowels naturally. I consulted another physician with no better results. The disease kept growing on me until I had exhausted the ability of sixteen of Rochester's best physicians. The last physician advised me to give up my work and go south after he had treated me for one year.

"I was given a thorough examination with the X-ray. They would not even determine what my trouble was. Some of your testimonials in the Rochester papers seemed to me worthy of consideration, and I made up my mind to try a bottle of Peruna. Before the bottle was half gone I noticed a change for the better. I am now on the fifth bottle, and have not an ache or pain anywhere. My bowels move regularly every day, and I have taken on eighteen pounds of flesh. I have recommended Peruna to a great many and they recommend it very highly. I have told several people that if they would take a bottle of Peruna, and could then candidly say that it had not benefited them, I would pay for the medicine."

A. C. LOCKHART.

Mr. W. P. Peterson, of Morris, Ill., says:

"I was nearly dead with catarrhal dyspepsia and am now a well man, better, in fact, than I have been for twenty years or more.

"Since I got cured by your Peruna I have been consulted by a great many people."—W. B. Peterson.

VOL. XIX. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1902. NUMBER 11

TO WASHINGTON.

Major McLaughlin Has Returned With the Treaty.

Maj. James McLaughlin left this city last Friday for Washington with the treaty which had been signed by a large majority of the Red Lake band of Chippewas for the cession of the eleven townships west of this to the government for $1,000,000; or a fraction of cent over $3,90 per acre. This will be the price which the settler will have to pay for the land. Mr. McLaughlin will make his report to the secretary of the interior, who will recommend and introduce in both the senate and house of representatives a bill for the appropriation of the $1,000,000, and a resolution for the ratification of the treaty. Mr. McLaughlin stated when he left here that he thought that the matter would reach congress in about eight days after his arrival in Washington, and that he would then telegraph to the citizens here at that time and advise them in regards to the matter. The city will probably send two delegates to Washington then to see that the matter gets through congress in proper shape. Mayor Kratka will be one, and D. N. Winton is being strongly urged by all to go; but as yet he has not given his consent.

Mr. McLaughlin states that unless something unforeseen happens that the land will be opened up for settlement sometime in September, and that it will be in all probabilities by the lottery system. Indians who desire can take allotments here, but if they do they will have to cease being members of the tribe and will not be entitled to draw annuities. The sum of $5,000 is appropriated to pay the expense of removing the Indians from this portion of the reservation to the Red lake. The remains of the dead Indians on the point will also be removed to the Indian cemetery at the Agency.

Word has been received from Maj. McLaughlin stating that Thief River Falls should send its representative to Washington on Saturday. Kratka and Winton will go.

LOTTERY SYSTEM.

Of Disposing of Public Land in Oklahoma Territory.

As the plan popularly know as the "Oklahoma lottery system" will probably be adopted in the disposal of the newly ceeded Red Lake Reservation lands the following brief synopsis of the method used at that sale will be of interest.

Registration.—At the time appointed and at numerous booths erected for the purpose each person desiring a claim appeared personally and upon the deposit of a fee of $1.00 his name, personal description and P. O. address was placed upon a card which card was inclosed in a plain envelope. The registration occupied fifteen days and the last man had the same chance as the first, so that there was no disorder or fighting for precedence.

Drawing.—Some days later, when all arrangements had been made, the envelopes containing the cards were publicly mixed and shuffled and all placed in a revolving box where they were further mixed beyond any possibility of recognition. Young men under age then drew from the box a number of envelopes equal to the number of available claims and each envelope was numbered progressively beginning with No. 1 and then publicly opened, the name and number being recorded by the clerks and the newspaper men present. These lists were at once published and the parties notified by mail.

Entry.—On the day of entry each person holding a number entitling him to a claim presented himself at the land office and beginning with No. 1 each selected the claim he desired providing it did not conflict with previous selections. As each claim was chosen it was marked off on the plat and no further entries were allowed on that piece of land. The claims selected were protected by the government and no contests were allowed except for fraudulent entry or, subsequently, for abandonment. Several squatters contests were begun but all were turned down.

RATES GO UP.

Insurance Rates Raised 25 per cent.

Local insurance agents have received letters from the various companies which they represent instructing them to raise the rates on all classes of insurance, except dwelling houses, 25 per cent. This means that insurance in the business portion of Thief River Falls will be very high. The highest rate paid before here was $7 per $1,00 but now the price will be $8,75 per $100.

SHAW'S PURE MALT.—Its value in sickness has been tried and proved. In the home it is not safe to be without it. Absolutely pure. Sold by John Morgan Thief River Falls Minn.

PLANS ACCEPTED.

For the Thief River Falls High School.

The school board held a meeting last week and accepted the plans of Architect Chas. R. Aldrick, of Minneapolis for the new high school building to be built this summer. The building will be 76x68 feet, two stories high with basement. The contract for the construction will be let in a short time, and when completed it will be one of the best school buildings in this section of the state.

St. Patrick's Day.

St. Patrick's Day was duly observed in this city Monday by an entertainment given in the Odd Fellows' hall that evening, by the members of St. Bernard's church. An interesting literary program was rendered, but the feature of the evening was an address by Attorney James McIntyre on the Irish problem. Mr. McIntyre was well posted upon his subject, and he gave the audience an interesting history of the troubles of the Irishmen.

GERMANTOWN.

The town election last week was the most interesting and largest attended in the history of Grand Plain township. Two factions seemed to be struggling for supremacy of the townships. The vote was very close on some of the officers, and resulted in the election of the following:

Supervisors—Henry Roller, chairman; T. C. Hovelson A. Johnson.

Clerk—John Olson.

Treasures—Ole Overum

Assessor—C. M. Peterson.

Constables—Henry Dan. and Hans Verdick.

Cattle Lost.

On March 13, lost from my drove on the way from Thief Lake to Thief River Falls Falls, one Heriford bull, three years old, weighing 1600, no horns; one red and white steer, three years old, no horns; one red steer, three years old, no horns. Persons taking cattle up will please care for same and report at once to John Patterson.

The Totals.

The totals for all departments of the city schools for the month just past are as follows:

Enrollment	523
Average daily attendance	460
Cases of absence	620
Cases of tardiness	42
No. neither absent nor tardy	217.

DEEDS OF BLOOD

EXCEED IN HORROR THE RECORD OF THE NOTORIOUS BENDER FAMILY.

NOT LESS THAN FIFTY VICTIMS

MANY MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCES ARE NOW FULLY EXPLAINED.

WOMAN'S AWFUL CONFESSION

TELLS OF OPERATIONS OF GANG AND HOW BLOODY WORK WAS DONE.

Beaumont, Tex., March 15.—Developments in the murder case here indicate that it will exceed in horror that of the notorious Bender affair in Labette county, Kan., thirty years ago. For months mysterious disappearances of people who have flocked here as a result of the oil excitement have been noted, and it is now believed that at least fifty have completely disappeared. It is thought that not all of these were murdered, but it is probable that a large majority of them were.

John Welsh, a white man who has been implicated by allegation by Mattie Bennett, the negro leader of the gang of robbers and murderers that have been operating here, yesterday was brought to Beaumont, having been arrested at Houston on the strength of the woman's confession.

Welsh denies complicity in the murders. He was an iron molder employed in the foundry with Benjamin Pearson, one of the murdered men.

Makes Horrible Confession.

In jail yesterday the Bennett woman talked freely to a reporter. She confessed everything except direct murder and went fully into the details of the plan pursued by the gang.

"The business has been going on for six months," said she. "The men would go out to the saloons and street corners and find men that had money. They would bring them to my house, and I and the other women would give them beer with knock-out drops in it. Then the men would either beat them up there and rob them or take them out into the hobo yard. I don't know how many men I have drugged; too many to remember, and all of them were robbed. I know I am safe in jail now, but if I ever get out they will kill me if any of 'em are alive and are out of the penitentiary then."

The Neches river, where five bodies of supposed victims of the gang were found, skirts the town of Beaumont. In some places swamps run back. Bodies thrown into the swamps stand small chance of being found, as the alligators would devour them.

THIS INFANT IS A WONDER.

Two-Year-Old Child Gives Remarkable Exhibition of Nerve.

Baldwins, L. I., March 15. — By an exhibition of nerve remarkable in a child so young, Willie Mitthauer, the two-year-old son of Augustus Mitthauer, a farmer of this place, was saved from drowning in a well in his father's barn. The well is twenty feet deep, with five or six feet of water at the bottom. A service pipe runs down one side. Willie fell in while chasing chickens. An hour later Frank J. Bedell, the boy's uncle, was passing through the barn and heard splashing in the well. Bedell found Willie lying on his back in the water, clutching the service pipe. A doctor who was summoned said the boy would probably die. But he did not. Yesterday he was out playing again. Enough candy and cake has been sent to him to give him indigestion for the rest of his life.

FIFTY PEOPLE KILLED.

Terrible Work of the Tornado in Louisiana and Mississippi.

New Orleans, March 15. — Reports from various points in Louisiana and Mississippi show that over a hundred houses destroyed and over fifty people were killed in Wednesday's storm and tornado. The heaviest loss was at Lone Landing, La., where the steamer Providence went down with twenty-one persons. Four persons are reported killed at Montgomery, in Copiah county, one at a railroad camp near by, two in Lincoln county, one fatally injured at Melville. At Keys postoffice, La., a church was blown down and several schoolhouses were destroyed in the line of the storm.

TOLSTOI WORSE.

Symptoms of Pleurisy Are Developed and He Is Growing Weaker.

St. Petersburg, March 15.—A sudden change for the worse has taken place in the condition of Count Tolstoi, who has been ill for some time past at Yalta, Crimea. JUDGE HAS SENSE

HE ORDERS TWO OBSTREPEROUS BOYS TO BE SOUNDLY THRASHED.

WOMAN USES A BROOMSTICK

PROCEEDS TO CARRY OUT JUDGE'S INSTRUCTIONS ON THE SPOT.

SAVES $5 OF THE FINE THEREBY

JUDGE THREATENS TO TAKE A HAND IF THEY APPEAR BEFORE HIM AGAIN.

Chicago, March 15.—"Thrash that boy. Take him home and whip him $5 worth, and that amount will be remitted from his fine."

Two parents of wayward boys, to-day heard this injunction uttered by Justice Mahoney in the Lake View police court, and as a consequence one strapping seventeen-year-old was beaten with a broomstick by his diminutative mother in the cellroom of the Sheridan avenue police station and another was led away by his father to a similar fate. And while the victims are eating at the mantel the question is being agitated to give court bailiffs a new job—that of Official Thrasher.

Charles McCauley lives with his parents at 1045 Wellington street and was arraigned before Justice John Mahoney this morning with four other boys, who were alleged to have become intoxicated on twelve bottles of wine stolen from Joseph Scheur, 924 Lincoln avenue. Fines of $10 each were imposed by Justice Mahoney upon William Ronschke, Ed Kappler, Fred Miller, Charles McCauley and Charles Otto.

Mr. McCauley, Charles' father, asked the magistrate to remit the fine in the case of his boy.

"If you will promise me that you will give that boy such a thrashing as he roundly deserves," said his honor, "I will just split the fine in two. I wish he were my boy—just for about ten minutes."

"I will give you my word that Charlie will get all that's coming to him," said the boy's parent.

Turning to the boy, Justice Mahoney continued "The idea of a boy of your size hanging around the street corners with a gang of drunkards. Your father will pay half that fine and the other half will be taken out in trade—on your hide. And if you ever are brought in here again I'll take a hand at it myself," he concluded, while the boy allowed himself to be led away by the big, broad-shouldered father.

Willie Got a Warning.

It was when Mrs. Ronschke, the mother of one of the other boys who was fined, heard that $5 could be saved by administering a thrashing that she volunteered to give her son the soundest beating of his life.

With Justice Mahoney's sanction the woman took her youthful off-spring—he, too, is only seventeen—down into the cellroom of the Sheffield avenue station and beat him over the head and back and shoulders with a broomstick. Policemen Jack Lorch and Lockupkeeper Barnett stood by to see that the boy did not turn upon Mrs. Ronschke, who is a small woman.

Man Who Had $10,000 About Him May Be Beaumont Victim.

Smith was formerly a saloonkeeper at Sabine, and later came to this city, when he came into an inheritance of about $10,000. This was about two months ago. The last seen of him he had nearly $10,000 in cash on his person, and for this reason it is expected that something may have happened to him. He had a wife and relatives in Georgia. He was about fifty-five or sixty years old.

CONGRESS.

House Wants Information From Secretary Hay.

Washington, March 16.—The house yesterday passed the postoffice appropriation bill. The only amendment of importance adopted was one to incorporate in the bill the provisions of the bill to classify the rural delivery service, passed a few days ago.

Quite a number of other bills were passed, including three bills for marine hospitals at Buffalo, Savannah and Pittsburg. The Burleson resolution calling on the secretary of state for the facts relative to the case of Dr. Thomas and wife, who desired to go to South Africa to distribute relief funds, was adopted after a short debate, in the course of which Mr. Hitt, chairman of the committee on foreign affairs, introduced a letter from Secretary Hay explaining what the department of state had done in the premises.

In the Senate.

Throughout the session of the senate yesterday the ship subsidy bill was under discussion. The measure was discussed by Mr. Foraker of Ohio, Mr. McLaurin of Mississippi and Mr. Harris of Kansas. Mr. Foraker supported the bill, although he admitted that he would havey preferred to build up the American merchant marine by the levying of discriminating duties. He was willing, however, to defer to the judgment of the majority that the pending measure embodied the better plan. Both Mr. McLaurin and Mr. Harris opposed the measure on the ground that in their judgment it was unconstitutional.

UP TO CLAYTON.

Charges Against the Ambassador Are Forwarded to Him.

Washington, March 16.—The Chinese against Ambassador Powell Clayton submitted yesterday to the state department were forwarded to him in order that he may make reply if he cares to do so.

It appears that the fight against the ambassador has been in progress for several months, and he is aware of all that has been done by his opponents up to this point. Now the question is for the first time raised formally as to the propriety of an ambassador or minister engaging in business, or even having financial interests in the country to which he is accredited. It is believed that there is no specific law upon the subject and it is suggested that the determining point in this case will lie in the character of Mr. Clayton's investments and the extent to which they might seem to tend to influence his ambassadorial actions.

The water supply was inadequate and the firemen were helpless.

The structure burned was the second finest building of the group. It contained much valuable machinery and chemical apparatus. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

THREE HUNDRED ARE MASSACRED

WERE OVERPOWERED BY A FORCE THAT NUMBERED THREE TO ONE.

REFUSED TO MAKE PRISONERS

CASTRO SAYS CASUALTIES AT AGUA DULCE NUMBERED SEVEN HUNDRED.

New Orleans, March 16.—Passengers who have arrived from Bocas del Toro, Colombia, report the arrival there with twenty soldiers of Col. Lastra, prefect of the town of David, on the Pacific coast of the republic, near the Costa Rican frontier. Col. Lastra brings news of the defeat and slaughter of the entire garrison of the town of David, numbering over three hundred men, and its capture by the rebels under Gen. Quateror.

The rebels, 900 strong, are well armed and had one cannon as they advanced on David. The government forces under Col. Duque were well intrenched just outside of the town. The intrenchments were carried at the point of the bayonet, fifty of the government troops being killed in the charge. A small force escaped with Lastra and Duque. Most of them were slain during the retreat. The 200 government troops left behind on the field of battle were completely surrounded by the rebels, who refused to make any prisoners and killed the entire force with matchetes.

Seven Hundred Killed or Wounded.

Panama, March 15.—The government generals, Castro and Ortiz, arrived here at 11 o'clock yesterday morning and received one of the most enthusiastic welcomes ever witnessed in Panama. The crowds in the streets leading to the railroad station made traffic almost impossible. The cheers for the generals were deafening.

Referring to the engagement at Agua Dulce Feb. 20, Gen. Castro told the representatives of the Associated Press that the government troops, numbering 800 men, were attacked by 3,000 revolutionists. On the third day of the fighting both drinking water and ammunition in Agua Dulce became scarce, and Gen. Castro ordered his troops to retreat. To do this the government forces had to break through the rebel lines.

Gen. Castro says he knows positively that of the forces under the revolutionary Gen. Herrera, over 700 were killed or wounded. He characterized the bravery of the revolutionists as something extraordinary, and said that many of them were killed within three feet of the intrenchments.

Ex-Commander-in-Chief of the British Army to Visit the Seat of War.

London, March 16.—Field Marshal Lord Wolseley will start for Cape Town to-day. Although the officials deny that his trip is anything but a private visit, gossip connects it with the military situation. It is pointed out that Lord Wolseley's knowledge of South Africa, gained as a fighter and administrator, might be highly useful to Lord Kitchener, either at the base (Cape Town) or at Pretoria.

Lord Wolseley himself says his trip is entirely private.

Col. Frank Rhodes and Arthur Rhodes, brothers of Cecil Rhodes, and Lady Methuen will be passengers on the steamer which will take Lord Wolseley to Cape Town.

STILL LOOKS DARK

LABOR SITUATION IN BOSTON IS NOW EXTREMELY PERPLEXING.

OUTLOOK IS MORE CRITICAL

LABOR MEN SAY THAT HARMONY HAS NOT YET BEEN RESTORED.

NEW TROUBLES COME FORWARD

FIRMS BOUND TO UNIONISM HASTEN TO HIRE NON-UNION HELP.

Boston, March 16.—The labor situation in Boston is extremely perplexing. To give weight to statements of labor men who spoke without authority that harmony is not restored is to make the outlook far more critical than at any time since the allied freight transportation council began its fight against the R. S. Brine Transportation company. On the other hand, Gov. Crane and the state board of arbitration believe that the problem is being solved quite rapidly considering the immensity of the strike, and only ask for time and patience from both laboring and business men to remove all obstacles for a resumption of freight traffic under ordinary conditions. As a matter of fact the strike was completely broken yesterday. Although troubles cropped out in many quarters, some were arranged without delay and others dragged along so that they came in for consideration by the various labor bodies last night. During these meetings, judging by what was argued by the men, independent strikes of bodies seem impending, but the leaders in the strike just ended are sanguine that they still hold control of the entire organized labor body and would not again be obliged to order a strike of the freight handlers, or its more serious accompaniment, a sympathetic strike of affiliated bodies.

In Uncertain State

The special side of the strike-breaking yesterday presented an army of workingmen rushing helter-skelter to get to their old positions. There had been more than 20,000 places vacated, but fully 10 per cent of the men found their places filled. This was the reason for friction all day, affecting only the men themselves, for the concerns were too busy on goods in their keeping to give heed to talk of unfairness. Freight began to move at docks, freight sheds, from and to wholesale houses and factories and upon the streets, and by night great inroads had been made on the four days' accumulation of goods. With the breaking of the strike, employers of freight handlers, team drivers or lumpers rushed into print with calls for more help. Even concerns which heretofore have been bound to unionism seem to have grasped the opportunity of hiring whom they liked. It is on this point of all others that the critical phase of the situation hangs.

The real battle yesterday was between the men who control the strike and the representatives of great interests who had been prevailed upon to consider certain propositions as a way to a settlement of the trouble, as for three days past it was Gov. Crane at his office at the state house who stood between the parties at issue.

TAKE IN THE TERRITORIES.

House Committee Decides Upon an Omnibus Bill.

Washington, March 16.—The house committee on territories yesterday decided upon an omnibus territorial bill which will provide for statehood for Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma, instead of separate statehood bills for each territory. Term Easter Is of German Origin.

Our term Easter is of German origin, but the name by which the festival is designated from the beginning is the Paschal, a name derived from the Hebrew: it commemorates the deliverance of the Jews from Egyptian bondage when the destroying angel spared the first-born of the Hebrew because their doors were marked by the blood of the Paschal lamb.

The Easter festival is the greatest in the Christian calendar; it is the climax of the events in the life of our divine Lord—his birth, his labors, his miracles, his betrayal, the bitterness of his agony at Gethsemane, and his cruel death on Calvary all culminated in the victory we commemorate on this glorious day.

The church has always held that the miraculous deliverance of the Hebrew people from Egyptian bondage was the type and figure of the far greater deliverance which would follow when Christ, our Pasch, as St. Paul says, would be sacrificed and by his blood would save us from eternal death.

The Christian Pasch was instituted on that night when our Savior, Jesus Christ, surrounded by his disciples at the Last Supper which he held with them, gave them under the form of bread and wine his body and his blood to drink. There is nothing in all the gospels set forth in language more unequivocal than this fact. The church has always taught, as he himself declared, that our divine Lord is truly and really present, under the forms of bread and wine, consecrated by the words uttered by himself, and spoken by those authorized by him to use them.

It is true that he suffered and died that all men might be saved, yet we know, from his own words and the teachings of his apostles, that many may not be saved because they will not make the necessary effort and sacrifice—"Many are called but few chosen." Faith alone in the redeeming sacrifice will not bring salvation; the mere fact that we believe in the divinity of Christ, in the teaching of Christ, in the redemption purchased for us by the death of Christ will not bring us salvation unless we ourselves do our part to make ourselves worthy thereof. It is not enough to have faith; we must also labor. "I have fought the good fight, I have kept the faith," St. Paul says; he did not consider it enough to have the faith only—it must be accompanied by good work.

The church, therefore, celebrates this day with more of joy and gladness and ceremony than any other in commemoration of the institution of that Christian Pasch which means so much to humanity! for millions of her children, under her guidance and direction, through prayer and repentance, and other penitential works are made worthy to participate in this divine banquet. They are restored to the friendship of God and have earned for themselves eternal life, for our Savior has said: "If any man eat of this bread he will live forever, and the bread that I will give is my flesh for the life of the world." (John vi.)

And she celebrates this day with unusual joy and gladness for the further reason: That it is the anniversary of that day on which the Founder by his own inherent power raised himself from the dead, thus giving the strongest possible proof of his divinity, and leaving to us, who believe in him and love him, a reason for the faith that is in us.

The Book of God.

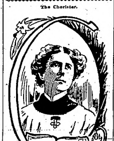
Highest of all is the book of God. This book is the story of earth's noblest spirits, in hours when they were filled with a passionate hunger for righteousness, and how they made a record for these great spiritual experiences in their poems, psalms and letters. No other book has such treasures of wisdom and culture. It teaches us the path that leads to prosperity and peace. It is the great book, the book of hope and life, because it is the book of God.—Rev. N. D. Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Heathen Nations Celebrate the Day

In the Christian churches of all nations Easter is celebrated as the day on which the Great Teacher, the Jesus Christ, rose from the dead and thereby consummated his divine plan of redeeming the human race. Since Easter is so indissolubly associated with the life of the Founder of the Christian religion, one would naturally assume that it is a purely Occidental festival, having its origin in the west and being confined in observance to Caucasian countries. Yet, strangely enough, in several of the countries of the Orient, in India, in Japan, in China, we find religious festivals bearing a wonderful resemblance—festivals that were observed by pious people thousands of years before the beginning of the Christian era laid the foundations of western civilization and power.

The festival of India analogous to the Christian Easter is called the "Feast of Buddha"; in Japan it is named the "Feast of the Higon," while in China they term the great springtime celebration "The Ancestral Worship." All these holidays have deep religious significance, for all have their origin in the spirit of thankfulness and rejoicing; that wherever man lives he has ever greeted the death of winter and the dawn of spring. In this sense Easter, the Higon, the Ancestral Worship, are all more than mere church days—they are man's spontaneous outpouring of gratitude to nature, alike beneficent mother of both Occident and Orient.

The Chorister.



Ye choirs of new Jerusalem,
Your sweetest notes employ,
The Paschal victory to hymn
In strains of holy joy.

A deep religious sentiment governs the Christian observance of Easter, and in that particular the Chinese ancestral worship is similar to it. The fifth commandment of the Christian decalogue is their first, "Thou shalt honor thy father and mother," and no sin in the eyes of the pious Chinese is so heinous as that of disobedience or disrespect to parents.

This filial piety is the fundamental virtue of their social life, and the respect which a son shows his father does not end with life, but is still shown to his memory long after his death. Nor is the deference merely an individual custom. Time has hallowed it into a great national festival.

It is called T'sing Ming, and occurs in the spring of the year. The Chinese do not make much ado about the death of a child or a young person, but when a father or a mother dies, especially if they have grown old, great ceremony attends the burial, from which proceeds one of their great common proverbs, "As much trouble as a funeral."

There is nothing in the lore of eastern religions to conflict with the hope of a life hereafter. Almost every faith of the Orient has for its foundation the theory of a risen Redeemer. And yet who can make answer to these momentous questions?

Easter Festival of Great Age.

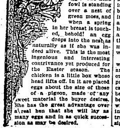
The festival of Easter is much older than the Resurrection of Jesus. Christianity not only converted the magnificent pagan temples, which it could not pull down, into churches, but it also adopted and adapted as many of the rites and ceremonies of heathen antiquity as were too deeply rooted in the habits and affections of the people to be eradicated. From the Greeks and the Romans the early Christians borrowed their emblems of resurrection and immortality—the Peacock and the Phoenix. The Easter egg, too, as a religious symbol is as old as the pyramids of Egypt and the primer of Oriental philosophy, which taught that the world was hatched from an egg about the time of the vernal equinox. We read also that the Romans in early spring ran races in an oval—an egg-shaped arena, when the winner was presented with eggs accompanied with wishes that his noble family may increase and multiply. Christianity colored the egg red to remind the people of the blood shed for their redemption.

That ceremonial Christianity is in a large measure paganism transformed or rejuvenated is admitted by the best scholars in the church as well as out of it—by Cardinal Nicholas Wiseman and Baronius, as well as by Max-Muller and Renan. "The church has borrowed many customs from the religion of the Romans and other pagans," says an ecclesiastical authority, "but it has meliorated them." Another writes that "the pagan festivals laden with superstition were changed into the praiseworthy festivals of the martyrs." Still another defends the practice by saying: "It was permitted the church to transfer to pious uses those ceremonies which the pagans had wickedly applied in a superstitious worship."

Ostera or Eostre, derived from "Ost," meaning East, was a Saxon Goddess who presided over the luminous powers which revived the earth and resuscitated life out of the shadow of darkness and the mold of the grave. She was the divinity whose face shone like the glory of the sunrise and the brightness of the dawn; her ambrosial breath made hill and dale fragrant, and her smile shed beauty over every breaking bud and blossom. The people congregated in the fields to cheer her arrival in the skies, because she came to destroy the genii of winter-darkness, sterility, storm, and death, and to shake from her golden urn blessings upon man and beast alike. "The Sun is risen!" they shouted, as they greeted one another and kissed and danced on the new grass. Our Teutonic ancestors devoted eight days of April, which they called the Ostermonat, to the worship of this beautiful goddess of life and love perennial, whose arrows, tipped with flame, had shot fresh hopes into their hearts. When Christianity converted the pagan Saxons, instead of attempting to abolish this joyous festival, it christened it into an institution of the church, preserving all its poetry and music—the flowers and the eggs, and only substituting Jesus, the "Sun of Righteousness," for Ostera, the Goddess of the East.

Easter, then, is a day in which Christian and heathen memories mingle, and we regard that as its most pleasing feature, because it lifts it from being merely a sectarian symbol into a festival of humanity. It demonstrates that all festivals have a common ancient source—the needs of the human heart, and that all religious, instead of being miraculously given to any chosen people, spring out of the eternal soil of humanity.

Let us rejoice to-day not that the "Sun" has risen or that one man has been raised from the dead, but that all mankind has been steadily rising during these many ages—rising from the deep, dark grave of ignorance and slavery to freedom and power. Let us change the Easter salutation, and instead of greeting one another with "Christ is risen" and "He is risen, indeed," let us say, "Humanity is risen," and let the refrain be, "Hail, risen Humanity."



The latest Easter novelty is a hen that lays candy eggs. The little fowl is standing over a nest of green moss, and when a spring in her breast is touched, behold! an egg drops into the nest as naturally as if she was indeed alive. This is the most ingenious and interesting contrivance yet produced for the Easter season. The chicken is a little box whose head lifts off. In it are placed eggs about the size of those of a pigeon, made of any sweet material the buyer desires. She has the great advantage over a real hen that she will lay as many eggs and in as quick succession as may be desired.

THE EASTER EGG.

The Easter egg has always been one of the most popular features of the Eastertide. It owes its origin, as many of the popular Easter observances do, to pagan tradition. It was held as symbolic of renewed life, and in the Christian church is an old emblem of the resurrection. In Germany, instead of the Easter egg, is presented an emblematic print, in which three hens are holding a basket, wherein are three eggs; whereas in Vienna the Easter egg is composed of silver, mother of pearl, or bronze, and filled with knickknacks of some kind.

Formerly in England the Easter egg was solemnly blessed by the priest, and, being elaborately colored, was often kept as an amulet. Easter eggs, or pace or pask eggs as they used to be called, have from time immemorial been prepared much as they are today, being boiled hard in water colored with red, blue, or violet dyes, with inscriptions, devices, or landscapes traced upon them. Some of the designs are very beautiful.

OF NOVEL DESIGN.

Perhaps the most curious Easter egg ever made was one ordered by a South African millionaire for his bride. It was made in London, and was nine feet long and eighteen feet in circumference at the widest part. The shell of this wonderful egg was made of chocolate, most elaborately adorned. It was intended as a wedding present, and held the whole of an expensive trousseau for the girl he was to marry. It also had in it an enormous quantity of superfine confectionery.

It is said that the most costly Easter egg ever made in the country was ordered by a railway magnate for his little son. It was a miniature carriage, most exquisitely appointed, in the shape of an egg. The exterior was of the finest white enamel, and the interior of white, quilted satin. This dainty little vehicle was drawn by two tiny ponies in gold harness. A boy would be hard indeed to please if such a beautiful present did not fill his heart with gladness. But the boys of the present day are luxurious.

TO BE HAND PAINTED.

Anybody who can use a brush at all can make lovely and at the same time novel eggs by taking a little trouble. The prettiest idea, and one which can be carried out easily, is to take a goose egg and paint a little spray of violets on it. These blossoms are symbolic of the spring, and so especially appropriate. Next make a little bunch of paper violets, ending as described before, in a bon-bon. These, of course, are to fill the opening which has been made to blow out the egg. Fill the rest of the egg with candied violet leaves. This makes as beautiful a little egg as the heart could wish, and especially dear to the recipient as representing the work and thought of the giver. A pretty variation of this notion can be made by drawing roses instead of violets, using a paper rose for the stopper and filling the egg with candied rose leaves. Endless designs are shown in the confectionery shops of the cities, but they can be painted at home just as well, and will be more valued.

OUR WIT AND HUMOR.

Two Columns of Jokes Ground Out by the Humorists.

He Knew by Experience.

Husband—My dear, I want to ask you one favor before you go off on that long visit.

Wife—A thousand, my love. What is it?

"Don't try to put the house in order before you leave."

"Is isn't hard work."

"Perhaps not, but think of the expense of telegraphing to you every time I want to find anything."

Erudition.

"Remember," said the Boston boy's uncle, "that children should be seen and not heard."

"My dear sir," was the courteous rejoinder, "that is one of the theories whose fallacy has long since been admitted by civilized nations. The emperor of China is about the only person in the world who gives it serious consideration."

Explained.

"There is a very intimate nervous connection between the brain and the stomach," said the scientific man.

"That explains it," answered the humble person who is willing to learn.

"What?"

"The reason why nearly every big political alliance or financial deal has to be discussed at a banquet."

A Fatal Jest.

"Why is the maddest anarchist nearly?" asked the young man with the jocular bent.

There was an ominous silence, and it was broken by the glad answer:

"Because he is all Most."

And when the ambulance arrived it was found that the angry crowd had altogether.

Going to Extremes.

Mrs. Crimsonbeak—I see in the paper that a woman, in looking after another woman, to see what she had on, fell out of the window.

Mr. Crimsonbeak—Well, that only goes to show that some women, in trying to follow the styles, can go too far.

A Possible Barrier.

Katharine—I asked that homely Mrs. Hobson how it was that she had been married four times and I hadn't been married at all.

Dorothy—Dear me! What did she say?

Katharine—She said that perhaps I was too particular.

About the Same.

"And are you going to sit in the gallery at the performance of grand opera?" we asked of the frivolous young thing.

"No," she tittered, "but we are going to eat peanuts in our box, so it will really be about the same."—Baltimore American.

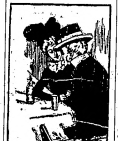
Still He Wasn't Satisfied.

"Can you give no hope?" he asked, disconsolately.

The tender-hearted girl was truly sorry for him.

"Oh, yes," she replied cheerily, "I can give you lots of hope, if you will promise not to expect to have your hopes realized."

An Explanation.



She—How did you become a drinking man, Colonel Sourmash?

He—I have a strong suspicion, Miss Easterly, that thirst had something to do with it.

Lovely Women.

Criteek—I saw you at the premiere of the new comic opera. I thought there were a good many fine lines in it, especially in the choruses, didn't you?"

Frontrow—Well, I noticed a good many fine curves in the "chorusesses."

Many a Slip.

"I came to collect a bill," said the caller to the office boy. "Is your employer in?"

"He was when you asked," replied the office boy as he heard some one go out the back door, "but he hain't now."

The Bible on Cats.

Sunday School Teacher—Now, children, you have all heard of the bad little boys that cut the tails off of the pretty kitties. Can any of you tell me a little verse from the Bible which tells about cutting off cats' tails?"

Little Girl in the Rear (after profound thought)—Yeth, ma'am, I can: "What Dod hath joined let no man put athunder."

A Brave Man.

"They say," remarked the sweet young thing, "that you were never really frightened."

"Nonsense!" returned the man who was honest as well as more than ordinarily brave. "They forgot that I was one of the principals in a—"

"Duel?"

"No—in a swell church wedding."—Chicago Post.

Hyphenated Citizen.

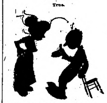
Casey—Av course, O'im an Irish-American, an' why not? Don't Oi live in America?

Cassidy—Oh, yes, Oi suppose it's all right.

Casey—Av course it is.

Cassidy—Ay, but 'tis lucky fur ye that ye don't live in England. Ye'd be an Irish-Englishman then, wouldn't ye?"

True.



"The jury was out two days and then failed to agree."

"That proves conclusively that we ought to have women juries."

"Why so?"

"Well, you know a jury of women would have disagreed sooner than that."

Wearing Clothes.

"What in the world does Prince Henry want with sixty-five trunks?" asked the mermaid.

"There are some people who think it nice to wear clothes," replied Neptune.

The matter had not presented itself to the fair nymph in that light, and she blushed deeply and turned away.

A Cautious Customer.

"How will you have your eggs cooked?" asked the waiter.

"Make any difference in the cost of 'em?" inquired the customer, cautiously.

"No."

"Then cook 'em with a nice slice o' ham," said he, greatly relieved.

A Pertinent Question.

"The Duke," said the European gentleman, "belongs to one of the most eminent and influential families of our time."

"Indeed," responded the American millionaire, with interest. "Who is his father-in-law?"

A Subtle Difference.

Sharpe—Oh, you're too pugnacious! You've always got a chip on your shoulder, for some one to knock off.

Carpo—That's the difference between you and me. You've got a block on your shoulders that some one ough to knock off.

Gathered Humor.

Phrenologist—Boy, you have a remarkable memory. Boy—Please, sir, write it on a slip of paper not for me to forget it.—Fun.

"It is rumored in Holland that the young queen wants a new husband." "Well, she won't have to advertise."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Robbins—I think Mac. will regret it. Wyld—What? Robbins—Having the girl's name engraved inside the engagement ring.—Town and Country.

Boy—I heard yer wanted a boy. Merchant—How old are you? Boy—I'm old enuf ter ride on th' cars fer half price.—Columbus (Ohio) State Journal.

"I understand Bilkins made a great hit on the stage." "Somebody has misinformed you. The audience made the hit. Bilkins was the target."—Baltimore News.

Mr. Bacon—I see by this paper that ice one and one-half inches thick will support a man.

Mrs. Bacon—I always said there was an enormous profit in ice, John.

Cassidy—Phere are yez going in thot new suit? Casey—Oi'm going to ask old man Flannigan for his daughter's hand. Cassidy—Th' divil! Ut seems a pity to ruin a new suit thot way.—Puck.

The subject (after the sitting)—I hadn't sat for a picture before in ten years, don't you know, and I'm deuced glad the worst is over. The photographer (innocently enough)—But you haven't seen the negative yet!—Puck.

Highblower—My first daughter married a poet, my second an artist and my third a railroad magnate. Dimpleton—And which couple is the most fortunate? "Oh, the first two of them. They are supported by the husband of the third."—Life.

GIRLS FIGHT DUEL

LOVE FOR A PART-BLOOD INDIAN AROUSES GREEN-EYED MONSTER.

AIR RIFLES THE WEAPONS USED

FIGHTERS SUPPOSED THEY WERE USING REAL WINCHESTER RIFLES.

ONE PLUNKED ON THE CHEST

RECONCILIATION FOLLOWS WHEN IT IS FOUND THERE IS NO WOUND.

Fenlon, Wis., March 18.—A duel between two girls, in which airguns were used as weapons, was the feature of the year at this village. The two fighters supposed they were using real Winchesters, but the girl seconds substituted popguns for the more deadly weapons, and the feud for the love of a part-blood Indian, whom the maids adored, ended in reconciliation.

Miss Della Shorest of Philadelphia, whose father owns large tracts of land in the pine district near here, came to Wisconsin for the winter.

A Milwaukee girl, Evelyn Mahoney, was at Mellen, a lumber town near here, for the winter also. Jim Short, a guide, who is about one-eighth Indian, has been piloting the girls about the woods in their efforts to learn to use snowshoes, skis and other woods equipments.

Both Girls Came to Love

the handsome young guide. They met two weeks ago and a horsewhip was used by the Philadelphia maid. As a result a meeting was arranged Saturday morning in a clearing. The seconds decided there should be no bloodshed, air rifles were secured from Ashland, and the two city girls told they were just alike and of the latest pattern. The Philadelphia girl fired when the Milwaukee maid was about to pull the trigger. Miss Mahoney felt the blow on her chest and fell. When she found that the airgun bullet had not touched the skin she was ready for a reconciliation. So was the other girl, who thought she was a murderess.

CLOSE CALL FOR A TRAIN.

Immense Structure Falls Upon the Track Just as the Last Coach Had Passed.

Toledo, Ohio, March 18.—A remarkable disaster occurred in this city yesterday afternoon. The big plant of the Toledo Metal Wheel company, which employs from 600 to 800 men, stands alongside the Lake Shore railway. Yesterday afternoon, just as a west-bound passenger train passed the building the structure collapsed and fell across the tracks, barely missing the rear coach. Two seconds earlier and every occupant of that coach would have been killed. The loss will be heavy. It is supposed by architects that the continual passing of trains caused the walls to weaken until they collapsed.

In accordance with the wishes of Mrs. Altgeld there was no military display. For two hours in the morning before the casket was sealed a steady stream of people viewed the body as it lay in state in the public library building. Along the line of march, which extended from the library to Lincoln Park, the streets were crowded with men, women and children in whose hearts Mr. Altgeld had found a place. The funeral procession, which started at 11 o'clock, was headed by a platoon of police. Feel Pangs of Hunger, Yet Refuse Offers of Assistance.

Forsythe, Mo., March 18.—Hundreds of farmers in the Ozark hills of Southern Missouri and Northern Arkansas whose crops failed during last summer's drouths, are living in a desperately poor way on short rations. It is estimated that probably 10 per cent of the population in the district noted has felt the bitter pangs of hunger this winter. Offers of aid have been refused. The chief distress now comes from a lack of seed for the spring planting. This is being relieved by the distribution of seed purchased by the governor of Arkansas with money personally borrowed from the banks. A member of the Missouri State board of charities who has just investigated the situation at the request of Gov. Dockery, will recommend that the Missouri delegation in congress send what government seed they can.

Pittsburg, March 18.—The Dispatch yesterday published the following: "Repeated threats to abduct his three children unless a ransom of $25,000 was left in a certain spot and a warning that murder would follow the placing of detectives on the case have caused Alexander R. Peacock, former vice president and general sales agent of the Carnegie company, to remove his little family temporarily from his Lexington avenue home to the Holland house, New York. The case was put in the hands of detectives and it is said the arrest of the guilty parties is now practically certain."

DESPERATE FIGHT

NEW YORK PUBLISHER GOES CRAZY AND CAUSES SOME TROUBLE.

TWICE MAKES HIS ESCAPE

PLACED IN A CELL ONLY AFTER A LONG CHASE AND HARD FIGHT.

MANIA TAKES RELIGIOUS TURN

BELIEVES HIMSELF SPECIALLY INSPIRED TO SAVE SOULS.

New York, March 17.—John W. Foster, Jr., a publisher, thirty years old, whose office is at 43 Cedar street, and who lives at 642 East 157th street was taken to Bellevue hospital a raving maniac, after being released from the insane pavilion the day before. At the hospital he escaped twice from the attendants and was placed in a cell only after a long chase and a desperate struggle.

Mr. Foster is a Catholic and his mania has taken a religious turn. For some time he has believed himself specially inspired to save souls. His eccentricities became so pronounced that last Thursday he was removed from his home to the Harlem hospital and from there was transferred to Bellevue. Doctors Fitch and Wildman

Pronounced Him Insane

His friends, however, objected to his removal to the Manhattan state hospital, and as his malady seemed to improve slightly he was released on Saturday, under the usual contract, in the custody of his brother-in-law, Richard O'Connor of 2232 First avenue.

Mr. Foster's wife is critically ill. It is supposed that her condition aggravated his mental trouble. This morning he became very violent. Dr. Packer, the physician in charge of the insane pavilion at Bellevue, was telephoned to and advised his readmission.

Later in the afternoon Mr. Foster, with great difficulty, was induced to enter a coach. He insisted on taking with him four cups and saucers and a large vase, to bring back holy water, he said. He also took with him a large Bible and carried an ebony crucifix fully a foot long in his right hand.

A Desperate Fight.

During the journey to the hospital he kept thrusting the crucifix through the carriage window and exhorting passers-by to "come and be saved." He also tore the leaves from the Bible and threw them among the crowd.

When the hospital was reached he evidently recognized the place. Immediately he got beyond all restraint. He jumped out of the carriage before his brother-in-law, who was with him, could seize him, and rushed at top speed down Twenty-sixth street toward the river, a block away. He held the crucifix and Bible upraised in either hand and prayed and shrieked at the top of his voice.

The lunatic, using the heavy crucifix as a battle-axe, fought off every one who came near him. Finally he was captured, but when he reached the hospital he broke away again and a similar struggle ensued. He is now in a padded cell.

YACHTING ON LAKE PEWAUKEE.

Many New Boats Being Built for Coming Season's Sport.

Pewaukee, Wis., March 17.—Yachting at Lake Pewaukee will be boomed this year as it never has before, and when the season opens Pewaukee will have one of the largest fleets sailing on any of the inland lakes in Wisconsin. Several fast "freak" boats are being built by concerns in Oshkosh and Pewaukee, and the addition of these yachts will make the fleet a strong one.

A. La Chapelle, the Pewaukee builder, has already completed two fast "freak" boats for Jacob M. Sheets and Henry Luensmann, which will cost $700 each, and they now have a third boat to be built on similar lines in course of construction, which will be sailed by Ferdinand Kieckaefer. They are also building two catboats, which will be owned by residents of the lake. Robert Nunnemacher is having a yacht built in Oshkosh and intends to sail on Pewaukee lake.

With these additions the fleet will number seven modern type "freak" boats and several older style craft, besides a large number of smaller boats.

Ferdinand and William Kieckaefer are having steam launches built that will cost in the neighborhood of $3,000 each. William Kieckaefer has already offered the services of his launch to the officials who will act at the regatta of the Inland Lake Yachters' association, which will be the biggest event of the season with the inland sailors. It is expected that twenty or more boats, representing clubs from Michigan, Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin, will compete.

CONGRESS.

Senators Berry and Hanna Lock Horns Over Ship Subsidy.

Washington, March 14. — After the passage of a considerable number of unobjected bills yesterday the senate resumed consideration of the ship subsidy measure. Mr. Berry of Arkansas, a member of the commerce committee which reported the bill, made a vigorous argument in opposition to it. He charges that it would foster trusts and monopolies in the shipping industry and that already J. Pierpont Morgan and his associates were forming a syndicate for the control of the shipping on the Atlantic. In this connection he became involved in a colloquy with Mr. Hanna of Ohio, who maintained that the ships acquired by Mr. Morgan from foreign countries could not participate in the subsidies provided by the pending measure. Mr. Perkins of California, another member of the commerce committee, delivered a carefully prepared speech in support of the bill, maintaining that it would add to the prosperity of the entire country.

In the House.

BABY IN GARBAGE CAN.

Washington Physician Finds Himself in Trouble.

Washington, March 16.—Dr. Charles E. Hagner, for thirty years a well-known physician in this city and a member of one of the oldest families in this section, was yesterday held for the action of the grand jury as the result of an inquest over the body of a prematurely born baby of Mrs. Peter Blair, found Wednesday alive and doubled up in a shoe box, thrown into a garbage can at the rear of the Hagner residence. At the inquest a colored woman pointed to Dr. Hagner as the man whom she saw place the box in the can. The latter admitted he was the man and said he fully believed the child was dead at the time. The physician at the hospital where the child was carried said the baby was alive when received and the negro woman testified that the child was crying when she found it. The coroner's jury in its verdict held that the child, "which was born alive and lived several hours, died from hemorrhage of the brain, which might have been caused during the premature birth, and that Dr. Hagner, who attended at the birth, was guilty of inexcusable neglect."

CUBAN RECIPROCITY.

The conference lasted about two hours and was not productive of final results, an adjournment being taken until 2 p. m. to-day.

CRITICISES CLAYTON.

Charge Reflecting on the United States Minister to Mexico.

Washington, March 15.—Mr. Theall, local counsel for Mr. Mealy, the American citizen who is held under an order of the court of Mexico for contempt, has submitted to the state department through United States Senator Nelson, a long statement of the case from Mealy's side, which reflects upon United States Minister Powell Clayton. It is alleged that the minister has misrepresented the facts in the case to the department and that he is interested in a rival company which has affected his attitude toward Mealy and his legal fight with the development company, which forms the basis of the present action against him.

It is said that he left Chicago about ten months ago short $160,000 in his accounts. He has agreed to return to Chicago without requisition papers. He says he lost his money in copper speculation.

WORST IN YEARS

NORTHWEST HELD IN THE GRASP OF A TERRIBLE BLIZZARD.

NORTH DAKOTA SUFFERS MOST

ALL TRANSCONTINENTAL TRAFFIC IS COMPLETELY ABANDONED.

SOME LIVES POSSIBLY LOST

NEW SETTLERS GO TO THEIR CLAIMS UNPREPARED FOR SUCH WEATHER.

Fargo, N. D., March 17.—The storm which has prevailed over the Western part of the state since Friday night struck Fargo in full force early yesterday morning and was continued the entire day.

The temperature has fallen to 10 degrees below zero and the wind has attained a high velocity. At intervals the snow was blown through the air in typical blizzard style, but at this writing the air is more clear and the temperature is falling. All trains on the transcontinental lines are tied up. Saturday's No. 11 and yesterday's Nos. 3 and 11 over the Northern Pacific are in the local yards. Saturday morning's No. 3 is at Jamestown and four east-bound Northern Pacific passenger trains are at Mandan and Dickinson.

The Worst Trouble

is between Valley City and Bismarck. Four or more freights are tied up in snow drifts between those points and the two rotaries and numerous snowplows have accomplished little or nothing at clearing the track. The high wind has kept the snow going so fast that the cuts fill up right behind the rotaries. The three passenger trains in the Fargo yards are kept well heated and the pullman passengers, with a number of day passengers, are remaining aboard. The Great Northern has had nothing through from the coast since Friday morning, and Saturday's and yesterday's west-bound trains are reported in the Barnsville yards. Both the Northern Pacific and Great Northern are running local trains from here east on schedule time and little trouble is anticipated in reaching the Twin Cities.

New Settlers Will Suffer.

Warnings of the storm were sent out forty-eight hours in advance, and as the temperature has not been extremely low, little apprehension is felt regarding the safety of the people of the state. Those who will fare worst are the recent immigrants, some of whom arrived last week and have had no opportunity to prepare for this kind of weather. A few are known to have gone onto their claims with nothing but tents and board shanties and with an extremely limited supply of fuel. Advices from the northwest of the state say old settlers are driving over the country rounding up the tenderfeet to see that none are frozen. The storm is less intense now in the western section, and it is thought the worst is over.

Mountains of Snow.

Devils Lake, N. D., March 17.—The blizzard which began Friday afternoon continues. No storm approaching it has occurred within the past six years. All railroad and other traffic is entirely abandoned.

Some Lives Possibly Lost.

Bismarck, N. D., March 17. — After forty-eight hours the furious blizzard which has raged over this section of the state shows some signs of abatement. The storm was the most severe in this section for fifteen years, and traffic and business of all kinds have been entirely suspended. It is impossible to state what the damage is until reports are received from the outlying country, and communications of any kind is now impossible. It is feared there will be great loss of livestock and some lives may have been sacrificed.

LOSSES ON THE RANGES.

Many Cattle and Sheep in South Dakota Probably Perished.

Aberdeen, S. D., March 17.—The blizzard which set in Friday afternoon is still raging, with no signs of abating. Trains are more or less delayed, and business is at a standstill. It is the worst storm for several years.

Pierre, S. D.—The storm which has prevailed since Friday night is the worst of the winter. Mail on stage lines into the city has been stopped. The temperature is about zero. It is probable that there have been heavy losses of cattle and sheep.

Severe in Wisconsin.

Black River Falls, Wis., March 17.—The storm here yesterday was the worst of the winter.

Sparta—The worst blizzard of the season has prevailed over this section for the past twenty-four hours and is still raging.

La Crosse — The thermometer here registered zero yesterday and the mercury is still falling. A high wind is blowing, and the small buildings and trees have been wrecked in all parts of the city. Trains on all lines are delayed several hours.

JUDGE HAS SENSE

HE ORDERS TWO OBSTREPEROUS BOYS TO BE SOUNDLY THRASHED.

WOMAN USES A BROOMSTICK

PROCEEDS TO CARRY OUT JUDGE'S INSTRUCTIONS ON THE SPOT.

SAVES $5 OF THE FINE THEREBY

JUDGE THREATENS TO TAKE A HAND IF THEY APPEAR BEFORE HIM AGAIN.

Chicago, March 15.—"Thrash that boy. Take him home and whip him $5 worth, and that amount will be remitted from his fine."

Two parents of wayward boys, to-day heard this injunction uttered by Justice Mahoney in the Lake View police court, and as a consequence one strapping seventeen-year-old was beaten with a broomstick by his diminutative mother in the cellroom of the Sheridan avenue police station and another was led away by his father to a similar fate. And while the victims are eating at the mantel the question is being agitated to give court bailiffs a new job—that of Official Thrasher.

Charles McCauley lives with his parents at 1045 Wellington street and was arraigned before Justice John Mahoney this morning with four other boys, who were alleged to have become intoxicated on twelve bottles of wine stolen from Joseph Scheur, 924 Lincoln avenue. Fines of $10 each were imposed by Justice Mahoney upon William Ronschke, Ed Kappler, Fred Miller, Charles McCauley and Charles Otto.

Mr. McCauley, Charles' father, asked the magistrate to remit the fine in the case of his boy.

"If you will promise me that you will give that boy such a thrashing as he roundly deserves," said his honor, "I will just split the fine in two. I wish he were my boy—just for about ten minutes."

"I will give you my word that Charlie will get all that's coming to him," said the boy's parent.

Turning to the boy, Justice Mahoney continued "The idea of a boy of your size hanging around the street corners with a gang of drunkards. Your father will pay half that fine and the other half will be taken out in trade—on your hide. And if you ever are brought in here again I'll take a hand at it myself," he concluded, while the boy allowed himself to be led away by the big, broad-shouldered father.

Willie Got a Warning

It was when Mrs. Ronschke, the mother of one of the other boys who was fined, heard that $5 could be saved by administering a thrashing that she volunteered to give her son the soundest beating of his life.

With Justice Mahoney's sanction the woman took her youthful off-spring—he, too, is only seventeen—down into the cellroom of the Sheffield avenue station and beat him over the head and back and shoulders with a broomstick. Policemen Jack Lorch and Lockupkeeper Barnett stood by to see that the boy did not turn upon Mrs. Ronschke, who is a small woman.

The last seen of him he had nearly $10,000 in cash on his person, and for this reason it is expected that something may have happened to him. He had a wife and relatives in Georgia. He was about fifty-five or sixty years old.

JIM YONGER WOULD WED.

Governor Asked Whether or Not Such a Contract Is Possible.

St. Paul, March 15. — Jim Younger wants to get married. He cannot because he is legally dead; hence is unable to enter into any contract. He submitted the question of whether or not he could wed to Gov. Van Sant, who has looked into the matter with some surprising results. In Minnesota a man who is a life prisoner is civilly dead. The only way he can make any binding contract in the eyes of the law, is through the board which paroles him, in this case the state board of control, which board is empowered to enter into a contract for him. The story has been published that Younger and Miss Alix Schurmeier of St. Paul were contemplating matrimony, and this report is recalled by the present application. The members of the board of control when asked as to whether they would consent to become parties to a marriage contract for Jim Younger, stated they did not care to give out a ruling in the matter until it should be brought formally before them to decide.

The farming districts to the east of Little Falls, and to the southwest also, are very anxious for the extension of its electric lines into the country, and a movement to vote county and town aid is being considered. It is hoped that a proposition will be made to construct about thirty miles of standard gauge electric railroad in the country at a cost of considerably over $500,000. The eastern part of Morrison county is especially in need of railroad facilities, as there are twelve townships of excellent farming land, some of it quite thickly settled, all of which is from ten to twenty-five miles from any railroad.

For thirty years the estate has been before the court and in the meantime rents to the amount of $9,000,000 have accumulated for the estate. WOLVES ARE A PEST

NORTHERN WISCONSIN AND MICHIGAN ARE OVERRUN BY THEM.

CAUSE FARMERS MUCH TROUBLE

KILL MORE DEER AND GROUSE THAN HUNTERS DO IN OPEN SEASON.

GREAT WOLF HUNT IS PLANNED

COLD WEATHER AND HEAVY SNOWS HAVE MADE THEM BOLD.

Green Bay, Wis., March 15.—In the woods of Northern Wisconsin wolves are more numerous than they have been at any time within twenty years. They have not been hunted lately because of a reduction in the bounty paid for scalps.

The exceptionally cold weather and heavy snows have made them bold and they are often seen close to the small towns. All farm stock is kept housed and the wolves so far have not attacked any farm animals except hogs.

They have invaded several pens at night. The destruction of deer by them has been great and they have killed many ruffled grouse, which they attack when the covey is sleeping.

Around Glidden, Butternut and other villages in the southern part of Ashland county, Wis., large Packs Are Roaming.

C. B. Conley, a traveling salesman who made recently a long trip through the pine regions, reports that loggers say that they have not seen wolves so thick for years. He saw places where deer and grouse had been killed by them, and is convinced that this winter wolves have killed more deer than were shot by hunters during the open season.

Two hundred hunters of Ashland and vicinity are arranging for a wolf hunt to last for several days. It will begin probably at some point on the Northern Pacific railway.

Only shotguns will be used. Two hundred rifles in the woods at once would be more dangerous to the hunters than to the wolves.

Some time ago Hage entered into a contract with Sunseth to have the latter remove a house. Sunseth set to work and finished the job in so short a time that Hage felt he had paid too much for the work. A strained feeling ensued between the two men from that time on. Recently a reconciliation was effected and in order to solemnize the event in an appropriate manner Sunseth bought a keg of beer and invited several friends for the evening. It seems that all parties drank freely and before they dispersed Hage began to revive several old grievances and made an attack on Sunseth, who opened fire and wounded him in the breast. Sunseth gave himself up to the authorities and is now awaiting trial. Much feeling has been created by the affray and the trial is awaited with interest.

DANGER FROM WOLVES GROWING.

The settlers are at a loss to explain the condition, and assert that the breed was never so thick before. Many losses are reported from the ranches and in many instances it is dangerous to venture out at night. It is feared that should the winter continue much longer a serious condition will threaten the cattlemen in the sparsely settled counties of the West.

SOLDIERS FROM THE PHILIPPINES WHO ARE HOPELESSLY INSANE.

MEN SNARL LIKE WILD BEASTS

INDULGENCE IN FILIPINO "VINO" AND OTHER DRINKS THE CAUSE.

PITIABLE IN THE EXTREME

MALADY WILL NOT RESPOND TO ANY TREATMENT YET DISCOVERED.

Chicago, March 18.—A car of insane soldiers passed through here yesterday. There were eighteen in number and they are being sent from the Philippines to the soldiers' hospital at Washington. Every one of the eighteen is violently and incurably insane. Their wild haggard faces peered menacingly through the windows of the coach, their manacled hands wildly threatened the onlookers and their fiendish shrieks and laughter echoed through the depot. Few of them were apparently diseased in body. The maniacs were in charge of a squad of soldiers armed with clubs. The guards said in reply to questions that a consignment of a score or two from the Philippines was by no means unusual. The affliction is due principally to indulgence in the Filipino "vino" and other harmful liquors sold in Manila, aggravated by the heat. The malady is of a violent and persistent nature and will not respond to any treatment that has yet been discovered. As the train pulled into the station yesterday afternoon there was a sound as of a menagerie approaching. The imprisoned men were chattering, snarling, moaning and whining like wild beasts and the noise was Terrifying to the Spectators.

Depot employes and trainmen who passed the car, not knowing of the presence of the maniacs, were greatly frightened when they heard a snarl of rage and then looked up into fiendish faces, which had their lips drawn back and teeth exposed. One unwitting man fainted with horror and fright and was compelled to receive medical aid. The condition of the maniacs was pitiable in the extreme. All were absolutely mad and violent. Every one of them wore leg irons and handcuffs, and some were in straight jackets and bound to their seats in the car. Most of them are young men.

FLOOD WARNINGS SENT.

Heavy Rains in Georgia Cause Rapid Rise in Rivers.

Atlanta, Ga., March 18.—Heavy rains Saturday in Northern and Middle Georgia, yesterday caused the Atlanta weather bureau to send flood warnings to Eufaula, Ala., and West Point and Columbus, Ga., predicting a rapid rise in the Chattahoochee. North Alabama was deluged as were portions of South Georgia and Northern Florida and streams in those sections of the South are out of their banks. At Albany, Ga., the Flint river, which rose at the rate of a foot an hour, has not yet reached the maximum height expected. The rainfall there in the past three days is nearly twelve inches. Many sewers burst and houses in the low-lying quarter of the town were surrounded by water for several hours. The river is still rising and all creeks north of Albany are out of their banks. The tracks of the Central of Georgia and the Plant system between Albany and Thomasville are reported under water in several places. Washouts have been reported in several places.

MILES TURNED DOWN.

Had Plan to End War in Philippines Without Further Loss.

Washington, March 18. — The Post says: Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles of the army, made a specific request to the war department to be sent to the Philippines, and in connection therewith submitted a plan by which, in his opinion, the war could be brought to an end without further loss of life to either side. He proposed to employ methods similar to those used by him so successfully in his Indian campaigns. Secretary Root, after due consideration, denied Gen. Miles' request, and disapproved the plan submitted. The papers, so indorsed by the secretary, were sent to the White House, and the president subsequently concurred in the secretary's opinion. The final indorsement, disposing of the matter, is said to bear date March 5, 1902.

Helena, Mont., March 14.—Gov. Joseph K. Toole yesterday refused to interfere in the case of Clinton Dotson, awaiting the death sentence at Deer Lodge for conspiring to murder his father, Capt. Oliver P. Dotson. Yesterday the governor denied the petition of Hiram Dotson of Spearfish, S. D., for commutation of sentence. Dotson, while in the penitentiary, induced another convict whose term had about expired to murder his father and leave with him a confession to the murder, for which the unnatural son was serving a ninety-nine-year term. Rickerby's Folly

CHAPTER XXI—(Continued.)

She opened her eyes and looked wildly about, saw something lying, huddled up, at her feet, and slapped her hands over her mouth to save herself from screaming. The something at her feet was Cornelius—and an instinct, truer than anything she had ever had, told her that Cornelius was dead.

Even while she knelt there in a sort of stupor, she heard outside the noise of running feet, and the voice of a man crying, "Cornelius! Cornelius! Where are you?"

Mrs. Reeks was on her feet in a moment—had stumbled to the table and blown out the light. Feeling a hand touch hers in the darkness, she raised the hand and felt about until she touched the face of the girl, put her own hand over the girl's mouth, and crouched against the wall with her, scarcely able to breathe. The footsteps came on; the door was opened; the voice of Leathwood spoke in the room "Cornelius!" Then, after a moment's pause: "Where the dickens has the man gone? And where is the girl? I've called all over the house; he must have gone higher up, I suppose."

The footsteps retreated from the door and began to ascend the stairs, Leathwood crying the name of the dead man all the way. Mrs. Reeks, still with her hand on the mouth of the girl, and with the girl clinging to her, crept out of the room—making a wide circuit of the body—and got out on the stairs. The voice of Leathwood had grown fainter as he went up; Mrs. Reeks went down in the darkness—stumbled, by good luck, upon the way she had entered, and found herself in the open air. There, while she was still hurrying on towards where she thought the gate must be, Olive Mallory stopped, drew back, and refused to go any farther.

"I can't leave Gilbert—I won't!" she whispered, thrusting Mrs. Reeks away from her. "You don't know what happy hours we have had in our World of Dreams; he waits for me there now. I must go to him; I dare not leave him lonely any longer."

Before Mrs. Reeks could say a word or could do anything to stop her, the girl had turned and fled away into the darkness of the garden. Mrs. Reeks took a few hesitating steps after her; she was afraid to call out or make any sound. She blundered in the darkness against the trunk of a tree; the girl was nowhere within reach or sight of her.

Mrs. Reeks stood shaking, with a deadly fear. She knew that—accidentally or not—she had killed a man; that she had left his body lying in the room of a London house. Her one thought—naturally enough—was self-preservation; she wanted to get away from this dreadful place; she longed, passionately, to meet her husband, even while she was wondering what he would say or how he would receive her, when he knew what she had done. The girl had disappeared; Mrs. Reeks was risking her own safety in staying there a moment longer. Utterly bewildered and terrified, she ran forward, recklessly, stumbling against trees, until she touched the outer wall, ran around it—fortunately in the right direction—until she touched the gate; pulled the gate open, and dashed out, breathlessly, into the street. It is probable that she did not stop running until she got home.

There, as she put her key into the lock, the door was pulled open, and George Reeks stood before her, radiant.

"My love," he cried, "where have you been? I got home a long time ago—came home by cab. Special occasion, my pet; I've got the £500!"

Mrs. Reeks stumbled forward blindly, fell into his arms (almost crushing the poor little man as she did so) and went into violent hysterics.

But never during the whole of the remainder of their married life did she tell Mr. Reeks what had happened that night.

CHAPTER XXII.

"By Fire I Come to You."

Half-stunned and dizzy, with a horrible pain in his head and his brain singing like a great humming top, Gilbert Rickerby slowly came to his senses. For a few minutes he did not know where he was, nor did he recollect clearly what had happened. He stood in a room which seemed to be familiar, but the walls swayed so giddily about him that he failed to recognize it completely for some time. Making a quite natural movement to step forward, he discovered that something held him; then that something was cutting into his wrists—something he could not move.

The momentary struggle did him good—stirred the sluggish blood in his veins and brought back a pleasant tingling life to him. Another movement of his arms, or an attempted movement, and he knew why it was that he could not stir from the spot where he stood. His arms were lashed firmly behind him and were tied to something immovable; some other fastening was around his ankles, and they were held in the same way.

It took time to realize all this—to grasp the fact that he was a prisoner and in the power of the man who struck him down. At first everything was dull and hazy before him; he had merely a dim idea that he was in some great peril, and that there was something he had to do—something he had been in the act of doing when he was struck down. Then that exasperating grip on his wrists reminded him of his helplessness; he tugged frantically at the things which held him, and failed to move them in the least, twisted about in an endeavor to discover what it was he was fastened to and how he was fastened.

He was in that room wherein he had slept when a boy—the room in which the body of James Holden had been hidden; and he was fastened securely with ropes, to one of the stout bed posts of the old four-poster bedstead. Gradually the whole business stole over him—the remembrance of his stooping to pick up the packet; of the horrible blow upon the head—of all the room twisting and bending and gyrating about him as he fell. But how did he get here, and who had fastened him up in this fashion?

Gradually, too, as full consciousness came upon him, he became aware that there was a light in the room; twisting his head around painfully, he saw the light standing upon his dressing table—saw a man's shadow in front of it and a hand stretch out and lift it up. Turning his aching eyes slowly in the direction of the shadow, he saw a figure advancing towards him, holding the light high, so that it might shine upon him. The figure stopped before him, and out of the swimming room and the moving shadows looked the face of Nugent Leathwood, with a grin upon it.

"Ah, so you are not dead, after all?" said Leathwood, flaring the candle at him. "I'm glad of that; it would have been too good a death for you, to die in a second, like that. You shall have your death spread out a bit—a lingering affair. You can only die once, you know, so we'll make the most of it for you."

"Why have you brought me here?" asked Gilbert, faintly. "You coward, you know you dare not face me, even in this weak state, if my arms were free!"

"I prefer not to take risks," retorted Nugent, with a grin. "You see, you're such a slippery customer, one never knows what might happen. But I don't think you will give me the slip this time. Now, if you are sufficiently sensible to understand what I'm saying, I want to talk to you. With your permission, I'll sit down, and I hope you're as comfortable as I am." He pulled forward a chair and sat down within a foot or two of his helpless prisoner.

"You have already one dastardly murder to account for," said Gilbert. "Are you going to add another to it?"

"I am," replied Nugent, coolly. He set down the candle on the floor at his feet, folded his arms, leaned back in his chair, and, finally, shook his head, laughingly, at Gilbert.

"Let him laugh who wins, Cousin Rickerby," said Leathwood. "You managed your business very well to-night, with your witnesses and your dramatic appearance at the psychological moment; but I managed mine better. Oh, you were going to be so clever: the girl was in your hands—everything was in your hands. You'd got the money—or one of your friends had—and you'd nearly got the papers. I should think that addled head of yours must ache a little, eh?"

Gilbert made no reply; he was determined, if possible, not to answer anything that was said. He wondered how long this man intended to torture him, and what manner of death he was preparing for him.

"You had all your arrangements made—the rope was dangling from the gallows for me—wasn't it? And now I have made my arrangements. Shall I tell you what they are?"

Still Gilbert did not speak; life was growing more strongly in him with every moment, and the instinct of sheer self-preservation prompted him to struggle again and tug at the ropes which held him.

"That's it—kick and struggle as hard as you like," said Leathwood. "This is the best game I've played yet. You dog—do you know what sort of purgatory you've made me live in for the past day or two? Do you know that you've made me die fifty times over; have made me start up in bed at night, with that horrible strangling feeling at my throat, and with solid things slipping away from under my feet? What agony is there that I can make you suffer that will compensate me for all that? I will give you the worst death I know of; but even that won't be enough."

"What are you going to do?" The words were forced from Gilbert's lips, strive as he would to be silent.

"I'll tell you. Cornelius and I carried you from the other house, just as we carried the body of that servant of yours. We brought you here and tied you up securely. When I've done talking to you, I'm going into the lower rooms of this house and I'm going to set fire to them. Every shutter in the place has been carefully closed, so that the flames won't break out, or be seen from outside, until the place is a raging, roaring furnace within. How do you like the prospect? You'll hear the wood crackling; you'll find it growing hotter and hotter; gradually the flames will creep up about you and catch the bed hangings and the wood of the bedstead—and you'll roast alive. Yes, Gilbert Rickerby—it was the worst day's work you ever did when you came back from abroad."

"You fiend—I did it, as I supposed, to help you—to give the girl to you, because I thought she loved you."

"Yes—that was where you blundered; you should have explained your meaning more clearly. You've been the direct cause of my staining my hands with blood twice over. You've made a muddle of the whole business—and you must pay the penalty. Cornelius has gone into the other house to get Miss Olive Mallory ready for a journey; we start to-night, and Rickerby's Folly will know us no more. You're very much attached to the place—or you should be, seeing that you were born in it—and I don't like to separate you from it. This place will blaze splendidly—and I don't fancy that they'll recognize Gilbert Rickerby when they find what's left of him. I don't think I need detain you or myself any longer. I have business to attend to—and, more than that, one mustn't keep a lady waiting. Good-bye!"

He reached the door, carrying the candle with him; came back again and set it on the dressing table. "I might as well leave you the light," he said, with a smile; "although you'll have light enough presently—probably more than you want. If you knew how desperately I hate you, even now, when I've won, you'd be quite surprised, I assure you. Any message to the young lady?"

"No message that you can take!" replied Gilbert, fiercely. "If you think that you can ever win her love or draw her to you, you are greatly mistaken. Tell her, if you dare, what you are—tell her that, with my last breath, I called you coward and murderer, and that if I begged for life at all at your hands, it would be in the hope of saving her from a fate worse than death itself. Go—tell her that!"

Mr. Leathwood laughed, shrugged his shoulders, and went out of the room, carefully closing the door behind him. Gilbert heard his steps descending; heard the opening of another door below; then heard the final thud of the door which led into the other house. After that a great and awful silence.

He thought of a thousand different ways of escape—thought above all of shouting, in the faint hope that some one outside might hear and come to his rescue. But he knew, when he came to think about it with what calmness was possible, that in the first place the house lay too far back from the streets for any sound to carry; and in the second, that the heavily shuttered windows would effectually deaden the cries. And then, as happens to a man when his end is close upon him, he thought of all the past—of all his unhappy childhood, spent in that very house and in that very room. The horror of the thought that he must perish there drove him to a species of frenzy. He struggled fiercely and beat himself against the heavy old bedstead to which he was fastened until exhaustion came upon him and he swooned away.

When he came to himself it seemed as though he had awakened in another world. Some strange feeling of resignation had come upon him; he could hear the faint, sharp crackle of the burning room below him, but any fear the sound might have wakened in him was gone. He had a feeling almost that this was a fitting ending to all his struggles and failures; if he thought about any pangs which might come with death it was only with a dim wonder as to how swift it might be and how soon before he lost consciousness.

Like a dream, too, for, certainly, it was nothing earthly, came the sound of a voice softly calling his name. That the voice should be that of the girl he loved and lost seemed quite appropriate, too, at that moment. It came upon him as a sort of dream-fancy, to answer the voice. He was very near death, he told himself, and this might be a voice from the other world.

But he woke from whatever dream clouded his mind with a start when the door was flung open and Olive Mallory stood on the threshold. For he knew that this panting, eager girl, with her beautiful face turned towards him, came out of no land of dreams, but out of the actual, vivid, waking world, to which he thought he had bidden farewell. Yet not quite out of the waking world, either, as he had yet to learn.

She came forward slowly into the room, with her hands stretched out before her and her eyes smiling at him, and in her eyes was that strange light he had never seen there before. Desperate though the need was, he knew that he dare not startle her—dared not do anything which should wake her suddenly to the world of danger in which they both were, and drive her from him. For, though his brain was reeling, and his bound arms ached, and he trembled in every limb, he constrained himself to speak calmly and to smile at her in return. The crackle of the fire beneath went on, and he could feel a perceptible increase in the heat of the room. God grant that he might bring her to see her danger—might persuade her to set him free!

He turned quickly and closed the door. "Gilbert," she whispered, "I have found you at last. I sometimes think that I frighten myself needlessly—that I fear they are taking you from me, when you are, really, close at hand. Why—how still you are! Why do you look at me like that? Why don't you come to me and take me in your arms, as you have done so often?"

The heat was growing greater; in one corner of the room a little, faint vapor of smoke had begun to curl up through a worn place in the carpet, and to float towards him. With a deadly sweat beginning to stand out on his forehead, he yet contrived to speak calmly to the girl—managed even to smile at her.

"I stand still, Olive, because I want you to come to me; I want to feel your arms around my neck; I want to hear you say that you love me, and will do as I bid you. Come!"

She went swiftly to him and put her arms about his neck, looked up into his face with those poor, pathetic mad eyes of hers. "See, I come to you; but I will not go away, as you have asked me to do before. We are in our World of Dreams again—never to leave it. All the world in which we once were has passed away from us; we do not need to trouble about it any more. We are together, dear Gilbert, and alone; we will not leave this place again."

The little wreath of smoke changed horribly to a tongue of flame; the heat of the floor beneath his feet was becoming unbearable. He knew that he must make an effort to induce her to release him, so that he might afterwards, even by force, carry her out of the burning house. He could not understand how it was that she had escaped from Leathwood; but she was there, and she must be saved.

"My sweetheart," he said, in a low, steady voice, "listen to what I say. We are in great danger. Our World of Dreams will soon be no more—will be swallowed up with us in it. See, I am tied here—and helpless; I want you to unfasten the ropes that bind me, so that we may go away together—do you hear—together?"

She looked at him in perplexity for a few moments, and then smiled and shook her head. "What a wilful fellow you are," she said, "always wanting to go away from me—never content with the world I build about you. But now"—she put her arms about his neck and pressed her face to his—"now I have you safe—now you cannot run from me any more. And see"—she pointed to those horrible, leaping flames, which were licking along the floor and leaping up the hangings on the walls and windows—"see the brave light that has come to brighten our world—to shine upon our love! No more do we creep about in the darkness to meet each other—flying at a sound, starting at shadows. See the bright light growing all about us, while you stand in the midst of it—my love—my love!—and smile at me. Oh, Gilbert, what a beautiful World of Dreams it is, after all!"

He saw her stand in the middle of the room, with her hands clasped and her eyes smiling with the glee of a little child, and knew that death was stealing upon them—death in the most horrible shape. Once more he called to her—yet softly—that he might not frighten her.

"Olive, come to me. That's it—put your arms around my neck. Your face close to mine—let me whisper to you. (Dear God, call her back to life and show her what to do!) I want you to understand what is happening and where we are. I want you to look straight at the light—the beautiful golden light—and see what it is doing. Look, it is destroying all the lovely world in which we live, breaking up and changing all that was ours, and that soon will be ours no longer. Olive, look into my eyes; remember, for the love of Heaven, for one brief moment, who you are and wher eyou are!"

Something in his voice, that old, loved voice that had never failed to move her yet—must have touched her at that moment. Scarcely daring to breathe, he saw he face so near his own changing slowly; saw a light of doubt and fear flickering in to eyes, answering the fear in his. God be praised! the poor, crushed spirit within her was waking to life and reason at last!

"Destroying our world!" she repeated. "Your voice is changed, dear Gilbert; it brings back to me the memory of something I thought—thought I had forgotten. Speak to me in that voice again."

THAT RED NOSE.

It Is Often Due to Imperfect Circulation, and Can Be Remedied—The Method.

Redness of the nose is often due to imperfect circulation. A nose which reddens quickly when exposed to cold air denotes weak circulation. When the nose reddens after a hearty meal it indicates that the digestive organs rebel at the labor imposed upon them. Exercise, body massage and footbaths frequently cure redness of the nose.

A red and shiny nose may be restored to its normal condition by observing the above hints, and applying every night a lotion composed of one quart of camphor water, one ounce of pure glycerine and one-half ounce of powdered borax.

Offensive perspiration may be overcome by bathing the parts in soap and hot water. Then keep the surface constantly dusted with a powder composed of pulverized oleate of zinc, one-half ounce, and pulverized boracic acid, three drams.—Ledger Monthly.

Perfume a Safeguard Against Infection.

Dearest Amy: Use plenty of perfume now that so much infectious sickness is about. The late M. Eugene Rimmel once proved scientifically that perfumes have a distinct sanitary value as antiseptics and disinfectants. He asserted that scent is a deadly poison to animalculae, and in proof of this he instanced the immunity enjoyed by the workmen in the perfumers' shops and factories, both in Paris and London, when cholera was raging. The essences he chiefly recommended as disinfectants were eucalyptus, lavender, rosemary, thyme, peppermint and pennyroyal. I should not choose peppermint, should you? But lavender is always nice. Do use plenty of it. This is no time to think of the rather bad taste of being over-perfumed. It would be very bad manners to catch smallpox and put one's family to the trouble of nursing one or or having one nursed through the attack.—Girls' Gossip, in London Truth.

Towel Used at Surrender of Vicksburg.

Recently the committee headed by Gen. Rigby of Iowa, to erect a monument on the Vicksburg battlefield commemorating the siege of Vicksburg, addressed Gen. McGinness, and other surviving members of the Eleventh Indiana infantry, which bore a conspicuous part in that siege, for data about the "Square Fort," which was the objective point for the division with which the Eleventh was associated. The fort was known to the assailants as Fort Lee, and was sometimes designated as the "Green" fort, because of its well-sodded condition. The inquiry disclosed that the damask towel which was exhibited on the morning of the surrender in lieu of the traditional white flag, was cut down after the surrender by one of the Eleventh, and while a portion of it was divided with his comrades as a souvenir, the greater part of it is still in possession of Will C. Phipps of this city, and is inscribed: "Piece of the Flag That Surrendered Fort Lee, Vicksburg, July 4, 1863."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Mme. Titiens's Money.

The fortune of the famous singer, Mme. Titiens, remained in chancery for years. She, it will be remembered, died in 1877, and left all her vast fortune to a relative, Peter Titiens. In 1873 Peter Titiens was living at Cardiff, and about that time announced his intention of emigrating to South America. Whether he did so or not has never been ascertained; but for three years prior to Mme. Titiens' death nothing was seen or heard of him, and for twenty years after her death other relatives tried to obtain the estate on the presumption that Peter was dead and had left no heirs. The courts, however, are very slow to act in such cases; and it was only in 1895 that an order was granted giving leave to assume the legatee's death if, after proper advertising, neither Peter nor his heirs put in a claim.—Chambers' Journal.

His Way of Putting It.

"It is true," said the person of high ideals, "that you have attained prosperity by your writings. But you have produced nothing that will live."

"Well," answered the comfortable litterateur, "when it comes to a question of which shall live, myself or my writings, I don't hesitate to sacrifice my writings."—Washington Star.

Policemen Praise Pe-ru-na.

As a Reliable Specific for the Ills Incident to the Vicissitudes of Their Occupation.

Hon. John E. Ptacek
Asst. Supt Police
CHICAGO, ILL.

John E. Ptacek, Assistant Superintendent of Police of Chicago, Ill., writes:

"I used Peruna for a very severe case of nasal catarrh, and am glad to inform you that it has accomplished a complete cure. I have no hesitancy in recommending it to others."

JOHN E. PTACEK.

Officer A. C. Swanson writes from 607 Harrison street, Council Bluffs, Ia., as follows:

"As my duties compelled me to be out in all kinds of weather I contracted severe cold from time to time, which settled in the kidneys, causing severe pains and trouble in the pelvic organs.

"I am now like a new man, am in splendid health and give all praise to Peruna." A. C. SWANSON.

Michael O'Halleran, Lieutenant Sergeant of the Summerdale Station Police Department, writes from 1903 W. Monroe street, Chicago, Ill.:

"Several of the officers of our station have good reason to praise Peruna. Several times when they spent hours in the rain and came in drenched, a severe cold has followed which it seemed impossible to throw off until one of them tried Peruna, and found the finest remedy for a cold that a man would want.

"Since then we have used it for colds, catarrh, influenza and other complaints following in the wake of inclement weather, and we all feel well pleased with Peruna." MICHAEL O'HALLERAN.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of the Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

What He Was Told.

"Say," said the funny man, as he paused in front of the depositors' window in a down-town bank, "are you the paying teller?"

"Yes," was the reply. "What can I do for you, sir?"

"Oh," said the funny man, "I merely wished to ask what you tell."

"I tell people who have no business here to trot along to the furthest extremity and be seated," rejoined the weary clerk.—Chicago News.

A Political Advantage.

"She doesn't seem to have any trouble in keeping a servant girl."

"No; her husband is the political boss of the ward."

"What has that got to do with it?"

"Why, he has the handsomest policemen assigned to that beat."—Philadelphia Press.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

How He Explains It.

Stephen—So it is all over with Miss Bolter? How did it happen that she threw you over?

James—I don't know for certain, but I suspect it was because she wasn't hopelessly in love with me.—Boston Transcript.

Locating the Trouble.

Tomdix—I proposed to Miss Gotrox last night by telephone, and she refused me.

Hojax—Serves you right. You might have known that you couldn't ring a girl up properly in that manner.

His View of It.

She—Do you think it possible for a man to serve two masters?

He—Not unless he's a Mormon.—Chicago News.

Her Idea of It.

Clara—So Ethel is married at last? Did she marry a man of family?

Maude—Yes; she married a widower with six children.

Never Hit Him.

Judge—What did you hit this man with, anyway?

Prisoner—I didn't hit him wit' anything, yer honor.

Judge—But look at him. He's in a horrible condition. Surely, you didn't do that with your fists?

Prisoner—No, yer honor. I ketched 'im by the heels an' bumped 'im against a brick wall a few times. But I didn't hit him wit' anything wanst.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Worldly Knowledge.

"Why is it," asked the person in search of information, "that a hatchet is so often used as a symbol of truth? Has it any other origin than the George Washington story?"

"O, yes," replied the cynical person. "A hatchet is suggestive of truth because you are likely to do a great deal of mischief with it unless you handle it with care."—Chicago Tribune.

Usually the Way.

"Now that we have a fine big house at last," he said, "what are your plans for the future?"

"Why, we'll spend our summers at the summer resorts, our winters at the winter resorts, and make a dash over to Europe in the spring and fall," she answered, promptly. "That's the right thing to do when one gets a fine, big house, isn't it?"—Chicago Post.

In Search of Quiet.

Hostess—I thought you were going to play "bridge."

Host—So we are; but they are playing "ping-pong" in the dining room and "fives" in the billiard room, Jack's trying to imitate Dan Leno in the drawing room, and Dick's got that infernal gramaphone of his going in the hall, and they are laying supper in the smoking room, so we're going to the nursery.—Punch.

A Lizard's Remarkable Intelligence

Pet Tried to Save Its Master from Deadly Snake.

Stories of pet animals which have rendered some important service to their masters are not common. One is apt, however, to associate such services wieth creatures of a higher order of intelligence, and would hardly expect a lizard to play the part of monitor; but the Leisure Hour describes an interesting incident of that kind which happened in Australia.

A gold-digger had tamed a bright-eyed Australian lizard, which made his headquarters in the miners' tent, and was an object of interest and attention on the part of all the men in camp.

On the march he made his home in his master's serge blouse, running up the arm of the loose garment, or round the full front above the tight waistband, as fancy took him. When the camp was pitched for the night, he employed himself by making the most careful inspection of the immediate surroundings within and without the tent. He made himself acquainted with every stone, turf, stump or hole within what he considered his domain, eventually retiring with the sun, to the blanket on his master's bed, where he invariably slept.

On one occasion he became restless during the night, and began to run rapidly backward and forward over his master's face, making at the same time a low, spitting noise, like that of an angry cat. By this means he at length aroused the sleeper, who gently pushed him away several times, speaking soothingly in the hope of quieting the excited creature.

But the lizard would not be soothed; on the contrary, having attracted attention, he continued his rapid movements, until at length his master, convinced that something was wrong, got up, struck a light, and looked around the tent. The sharp eyes of the lizard followed every movement with intense interest.

Nothing unusual could be seen, and the miner lay down again. He was scarcely asleep, however, before the lizard waked him again, and losing patience, he seized the creature and in the darkness tossed him from the bed across the tent.

In his involuntary flight the little animal struck the tent-pole with considerable force, and half of his tail was broken off—a matter of no very great importance to a lizard, perhaps, but still a discouraging reward for a well-meant warning. Nevertheless, the maimed little reptile returned to the bed, kept close to his master, and continued restless and excited all the rest of the night.

At daybreak, when the tents were struck, and the bedding rolled up, ready to be placed on the cart, the mystery was explained. In the scrub and fern thrown underneath the bedding, to keep it from the bare ground, a huge tiger snake with several young ones was discovered.

The tiger snake is of a kind muck feared by the colonists, and, like most snakes, has a pronounced odor, which, no doubt, had made the lizard aware of its presence. It had probably crept into the tent after the lizard had made its evening inspection of the premises.

OCEAN LOSING REPUTATION

Mariners Beginning to Dread the Pacific as Much as Atlantic.

The Pacific ocean is fast losing the reputation implied in the name given to it by Magellan, and which it owes to the placid appearance of its surface when he first saw it. The change is one of the inevitable results of the growth of commerce. Prior to the discovery of gold in California comparatively few vessels sailed over its waters. There were, therefore, few casualties to report. In late years, however, commerce has extended in all directions. The ocean is filling with ships, and the disasters of the sea are multiplying proportionately.

Along the California coast the ocean is placid enough to retain its reputation as pacific. Storms are rare. It is not often that its waters are lashed into fury like those of the Atlantic in these latitudes. But along the Oregon, Washington and British Columbian and Alaskan coasts there is little if any difference between the conditions prevailing in the Pacific from those existing in the Atlantic ocean. Mariners now dread Cape Flattery, at the entrance to the Strait of Juan de Fuca, almost if not quite as much as they do Cape Hatteras, on the eastern coast. Wrecks are lining the northwestern coast of the continent as they do the northeastern shores of it.

As the Pacific ocean is gradually filling with the white-winged and steam-propelled agents of commerce the ratio of shipwrecks is correspondingly rising. Perhaps there have been more wrecks on the Pacific coast than should have been experienced if the same precautions against disaster had been adopted in the navigation of Pacific waters as are taken in the Atlantic ocean. The Pacific has undoubtedly been made the graveyard of many steam and sail vessels which were transferred to it from the Atlantic ocean because they were not considered safe to keep in commission in the latter, under the mistaken belief that milder weather and smoother water were to be found here. Others have been lost through the vicious practice of overloading, the risk being taken on account of the same error of opinion regarding the placidity of these waters. Shipowners are, however, fast learning, says the San Francisco Chronicle, that rotten hulks and over-loaded craft are not any more immune from disaster here than they are anywhere else. The growth of commerce and the increasing perils of navigation resulting from it demand the abandonment of both.

The Forbidden Land

Travelers Learn Little of the Wonderful Country of Tibet.

"Adventures in Tibet," written by William Carey and published by the United States Society of Christian Endeavor, is the latest work dealing with the most mysterious of all lands. It is very interesting and instructive and well illustrated with many photographs.

Mr. Carey himself spent many months in Tibet gathering information. He also describes the astonishing journey through the country made by Miss Annie R. Taylor with nothing but native servants. She passed within three days of Lhasa, the forbidden city, and narrowly escaped with her life.

The lamas or monks rule Tibet, says Mr. Carey. A hundred, or a thousand, or even five thousand of them, may be herded together, if not exactly under one roof, yet in one great building, whose ramifications root themselves like a fortress in the rocks, and whose walls and windows frown upon the surrounding fields.

The rest of the timid Tibetans huddle in huts at the monastery gates, or till the soil and tend their flocks that the lamas may live at ease. Deeper than the roots of the lamaseries sink into the rocks has the power of the lamas lodged in the hearts of the people. Every family has at least one representative in the cloisters. Often there are two, and not seldom three. It has been reckoned that every sixth person of the entire population is either a lama or a lama novitiate.

The only education is monkish; the only architecture that of the temples and monasteries, which seem to grow out of the craggy heights on which they are perched; the one universal and unceasing religious rite is the twirling of a "prayer wheel" and the mumbling of a meaningless sentence. The lama holds the people in the hollow of his hand, and many forces meet in that magnetic and masterful grip.

If you think you are a martyr, don't inscribe it on your door plate.

A Disagreement.

Not many years ago when he was a young lawyer, Congressman Watson of Indiana, was one of the attorneys in a suit over a pig. Judge Goodrich, subsequently chairman of the Republican state committee, was on the other side, and the case was before a portly magistrate of the name of Reverdy Puckett, who was running as a candidate for mayor of Winchester. "Puckett," said Mr. Watson to him one afternoon, before the case came up for trial, "I must win this suit. If I don't I will fight you for mayor; I'll fight you to a finish."

Goodrich also got the magistrate's ear with a similar appeal and threat, he and Watson having arranged the matter between them to get some fun out of the situation.

"The day before the primary," says Mr. Watson, in concluding the story, "Goodrich and I thought we would go around to Puckett's office and ascertain how we stood. He was absent when we called, but his docket lay wide open on the desk. We couldn't help looking at it. There in the boldest characters we could write were the words:

"'Disagreed, by thunder.'

"There was no jury in the case, but that little matter hadn't bothered Puckett."

Evil Effects of Wood Alcohol.

Wood alcohol is gaining an ill repute all its own. Dr. H. Moulton has pointed out to the American Medical association that no other known substance when swallowed so uniformly selects for attack the optic nerve and retina, and in thirty cases of poisoning from it reported in two or three years, fifteen have resulted in total blindness.

And Put Him in the Shade.

Hewitt—What became of the girl that you used to say was the light of your life?

Jewett—Another fellow came between me and the light.—Judge.

Coal in China.

The greatest coal field of the old world is that of northern China. Although not yet known as to its limits and quality, it is considered better than all the others put together. This same statement can also be truthfully made in regard to the merits of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, it being the best medicine in the world for indigestion, dyspepsia, nervousness, insomnia, and malaria, fever and ague. A trial will convince you of its value.

Willing to Help.

This sounds like a vaudeville joke with a special setting. Representative Sibley of Pennsylvania is bald, very bald, in fact. Not long ago he was entertaining in his Washington home a little girl, who found her host's shiny bald pate a subject for frequent and studious examination. One evening, when the child was reclining on a rug at the congressman's feet, a bright thought seemed to strike her.

"Mr. Sibley," she inquired, "would you have a small rabbit painted on your head?"

"Why a rabbit, my dear?"

"Because," returned the artless miss, "it would be a little hare."—Brooklyn Eagle.

English as She Is Spoke.

One of the latest games, bilo, is thus explained by the Grants:

"First, you buy a bicycle; that's where the bi comes in; then you get a polo stick, and that is the lo part of it."

Presently a rival university will further corrupt the word into "biliers," and then where are the philologists? On the same principle, we have heard mixed hockey, in which men and women play, called "mixers," a corruption, perhaps, of the portmanteau mixey.—London Globe.

This Is Simply Wonderful.

Champion, Mich., March 17th—Mrs. A. Wellett, wife of a local photographer, had a remarkable experience recently.

Mrs. Wellett tells the story this way: "I could not sleep, my feet were cold, my limbs cramped. I had an awful hard pain across my back. I had to get up three or four times every night. I was very nervous and fearfully despondent. I had very little appetite.

"After I had suffered in this way for five years, I began to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. When I had taken a few pills you ought to have seen what came from my kidneys. It looked like a spoiled egg, only darker.

"I kept on using Dodd's Kidney Pills till I was cured. Now I can sleep well and do not have to get up in the night. I have no pain in my back or limbs, and I feel better than I have for years."

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.

Men of Affairs

One may sail the seas and visit every land and everywhere will find, that men of affairs, who are well informed, have neither the time nor the inclination, whether on pleasure bent or business, to use those medicines which cause excessive purgation and then leave the internal organs in a constipated condition. Syrup of Figs is not built on those lines. It acts naturally, acts effectively, cleanses, sweetens and strengthens the internal organs and leaves them in a healthy condition.

If in need of a laxative remedy the most excellent is Syrup of Figs, but when anything more than a laxative is required the safe and scientific plan is to consult a competent physician and not to resort to those medicines which claim to cure all manner of diseases.

The California Fig Syrup Co. was the first to manufacture a laxative remedy which would give satisfaction to all; a laxative which physicians could sanction and one friend recommend to another; so that today its sales probably exceed all other laxatives combined. In some places considerable quantities of old-time cathartics and modern imitations are still sold, but with the general diffusion of knowledge, as to the best medicinal agents, Syrup of Figs has come into general use with the well-informed, because it is a remedy of known value and ever beneficial action.

The quality of Syrup of Figs is due not only to the excellent combination of the laxative and carminative principles of plants, known to act most beneficially on the system, with agreeable and refreshing aromatic liquids, but also to the original method of manufacture. In order to get the genuine and its beneficial effects one should always note the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package.

VOL. XIX. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1902. NUMBER 12

VERY LUCKY.

A Disastrious Fire Narrowly Averted.

That the business portion of Thief River Falls was not entirely consumed Sunday is little less than a miracle. At about 6:30 Sunday morning fire was discovered in the rear of the building formerly occupied by A. Piche's butcher shop, now occupied by Ole Bloom. The fire originated in the portion of the building in which hams were being smoked, and when discoverd was well under way. The fire engine, which was undergoing some repairs, was not in condition to be used, and a force of men at once went to work with pails and succeeded in extinguishing the fire. The good work done by the firemen is worthy of much praise.

The damage to the building which was owned by K. M. Hansen, was about $100, and A. Piche lost about $60 worth of ham. There was no insurance.

AT WASHINGTON.

F. H. Kratka and D. N. Winton Now There.

There will probably be no difficulty in securing favorable action, and the land will be opened up about next September.

Broke Her Leg.

Mrs. Miller, wife of the superintendent of the St. Hilaire mill, while going to the depot yesterday afternoon, fell and broke her leg. The accident happened west of the city hall. The sidewalk was not defective.

MAY DROP MILES

ENFORCED RETIREMENT OF THE GENERAL AMONG THE PROBABILITIES.

PRESIDENT DISCUSSES THE CASE

DECLARES THAT HE IS TIRED OF THE FRICTION IN THE ARMY.

CABINET TAKES MATTER UP

SHOULD RESPECT SUPERIORS AS HE WOULD BE RESPECTED.

Washington, March 23. — The statements made by Gen. Miles before the senate committee on military affairs were discussed by the president yesterday with a number of his callers. There is little doubt that these statements ultimately will lead to Gen. Miles' retirement by the president.

In discussing the matter with his callers, among whom were senators and representatives, the president took the position that the lieutenant general of the army should entertain toward his superiors the same respect that he would expect and demand from his subordinates.

It is significant that long after the cabinet meeting adjourned Secretary Root and the attorney general were closeted with the president. The president is known to have stated that he was tired of the and whether or not it is decided that Gen. Miles' statement was a privileged one, he will at no distant day take action looking to his retirement. The printed testimony of Gen. Miles has not yet been made public and it is understood that a great deal of what the general said will not appear in the record. Members of the committee say the report published was correct in substance in every particular. At the same time these senators do not agree that Gen. Miles can be punished for his utterances before the committee, whether they appear in the record or not. Of course, the committee could take no action to prevent the retirement of Gen. Miles. That, under the law, is purely an executive act and needs no confirmation or approval of the senate.

MANSIONS ARE WRECKED.

Brownstone Fronts Undermined by a Tunnel.

New York, March 21.—Park avenue, this city, yesterday was again the scene of an accident which, while it entailed no loss of life, caused a property loss of considerable proportions.

The brownstone fronts of several four-story private houses on the east side of the avenue sank because of the undermining of the foundations by excavations for the rapid transit tunnel. The first serious cave-in occurred when the sidewalk and area way of No. 55 Park avenue sank to a considerable depth, leaving the front wall with no support and exposing the cellar. The houses on either side of No. 55 were also rendered unsafe. Later in the afternoon there occurred a further settling of the walls and sidewalks and the residents on the east side of the block were ordered by the police to leave their homes.

The tunnel along Park avenue, where the trouble occurred, is bored through solid rock. Seams of rock for a distance of about sixty feet commenced to slide in a lateral direction into the tunnel Wednesday night. It was believed, however, that no great damage would be done, until to-day, when the first cave-in occurred.

FIRST STUDENT FRACAS.

Melee at South Dakota University Results in Disfigurements.

Vermillion, S. D., March 23.—The desperate battle between the freshmen and seniors of the state university here yesterday was the first of the kind in the history of the institution. The freshmen were victorious, but their blood mingled with that of the vanquished seniors in decorating the campus and the sidewalks leading to the drugstores and rooms of the combatants. Noses suffered greatly, but the clothing of half a hundred of the five-score mixed in the melee looked as if the wearers were specially dressed for a hard-times party.

COAL MINERS DO NOT ALL AGREE.

Expectations of Adjustment Are Not Fulfilled.

Shamokin, Pa., March 23.—Contrary to expectations the convention of Districts Nos. 1 and 2, United Mineworkers of America, yesterday failed to reach a determination concerning the grievance of the anthracite coal miners. Many of the delegates had expected an adjournment and definite action not later than yesterday, but the discussion of the scale committee report was more protracted than anticipated, and its adoption entire had not been accomplished at the hour of adjournment yesterday afternoon.

BIG DEAL IN STAMPS.

One Purchase of $25,000 Worth at the Chicago Postoffice.

Chicago, March 24.—A record-breaking sale of postage stamps is reported by the Chicago postoffice. The sale was 1,000,000 stamps, on which the purchaser gave a check for $25,000. In one package were 500,000 4-cent stamps, and in the other the same number of 1-cent stamps. This is the largest individual purchase of stamps in the history of the Chicago postoffice.

EMBEZZLEMENT IS CHARGED.

Former Township Treasurer Thrown Into Jail.

Menominee, Mich., March 23.—Former Treasurer Louis Beauchamp of Spalding township was brought from his home in Wilson by Sheriff Stiles and placed in the jail here, charged with the embezzlement of $9,214.22. Beauchamp was elected in April, 1899, and served two consecutive terms. He was arraigned and placed under a $2,500 bond to appear on April 4.

MISSOURI'S COURSE CHANGED.

Mass of Ice Fills Stream to Bottom and Water Finds Another Outlet.

Chamberlain, S. D., March 23.—The water in the Missouri river remains about the same as early yesterday morning, showing a total rise of one foot. A gorge has formed between Chamberlain and American island and ice is packed solid to the bottom of the river along the entire length of the island, a distance of about four miles. This has diverted the channel to the west side of the island, where the water and a heavy run of ice is passing freely. This is very likely to leave the channel permanently on the west side of the island, as, with an open channel there no pressure exists to clear out the gorge on the east side. A three-foot rise is reported at Evarts and the water will doubtless go somewhat higher, yet it is felt that the critical stage has been passed, the accumulated water having passed out gradually. No further serious trouble is anticipated, as it will yet stand a reasonable rise before touching the danger point.

SWEET IN SWEAT-BOX.

Alleged Convent Thief Makes a Confession.

Milwaukee, March 23.—That the barefooted thief, Sweet, alias Sullivan, robbed three convents in St. Paul and Minneapolis and secured about $500 is the substance of his confession to the police as a result of a sweat-box seance. The fact that he robbed church folk alone may result in his early release, instead of confinement in prisons of various states, is the result of his examination in court. When he was arraigned yesterday Rev. J. Beveridge Lee, whose home Sweet entered, announced that he would prosecute him on the minor charge with a hope that the police of St. Paul, St. Louis, Denver and Chicago might be induced to give up the prosecution by the time he finished his prison term, if he showed signs of reformation.

LA CROSSE BUYS HOUNDS.

Man-Hunting Dogs to Be Used in Tracking Criminals.

La Crosse, Wis., March 23. — Two trained man-hunting bloodhounds have been importuned from Tennessee by the city for the purpose of running to earth a gang of crooks which infest this vicinity. The larger of the hounds has a record of having captured sixteen criminals in his native state. In Galesville, a village a few miles north of here, the village water supply tank was recently burned by an incendiary, and Thursday the movable property of the village minister was stolen. The hounds will be used upon this case at once, and the Galesville village board has offered a reward of $500 if they trace the criminal. There will be a public demonstration with the bloodhounds to-day.

GUILTY OF FORGERY.

Albert Saunders Pleads Guilty and Gets Five-Year Sentence.

Fargo, N. D., March 23. — Albert Saunders, who has been in jail here some months on a charge of forging a $400 check at Casselton, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to five years in the penitentiary. Saunders purchased horses over the country, and after making a deal, would request the owner to identify him at the bank so checks for large sums could be cashed. It is said that Saunders operated similarly in Kentucky, and one of the witnesses here testified that the defendant has been under arrest there as J. H. Burton.

Duluth, Minn., March 23.—Burglars perpetrated a most daring robbery last night. They climbed a telegraph pole in the street to the top of a building, got to the roof by means of a board and entered the skylight of a one-story building occupied by R. C. Kruschke as a jewelry store, and stole goods worth $400. They were then scared away by a burglar alarm in the showcase. Outside they stole a team and drove away, and they have not yet been located.

The doctors are unable to state whether he will recover. Bryan was arrested and detained at the central police station pending reports from the hospital.

Foul Play Suspected.

Sedan, Minn., March 23. — The coroner's jury has decided that the unknown man found dead by the track yesterday was struck by the cars. There is a suspicion of foul play, but the evidence before the jury was too meager to base a verdict of positiveness upon. The suspect in jail at Glenwood may be held until the case can be investigated further.

WAR IN EARNEST

VENEZUELAN REVOLUTION NOW SEEMS TO BE TAKING FORM.

CASTRO'S DOWNFALL AT HAND

SITUATION GROWS MORE SERIOUS AND THE CRISIS IS NOT FAR OFF.

SEVERAL TOWNS ARE BESIEGED

AGGRESSIVE PLANS BEING CARRIED OUT BY THE REVOLUTIONISTS.

Willemstad, Curacoa, March 22.—The Venezuelan revolution headed by Gen. Matos seems to be taking form. Eight hundred revolutionists under Gen. Penaizo, are besieging Carupano, a seaport town in the State of Bermudez, and the revolutionists under Gen. Monagas have surrounded Barcelona, the capital of the State of Bermudez.

Gen. Velatini, the Venezuelan minister of the interior, has been dispatched on a special mission to Barcelona, but, it is said that he will arrive there too late.

Gen. Riera, who escaped the pursuit of the Venezuelan government troops near Cumarebo, in the state of Falcon, is marching in the direction of Tucacas, a seaport town in the State of Lara, which place is to be by his troops and from the sea by the revolutionary steamer Bolivar, also known as the Libertador.

Attacked on Land

The Venezuelan government is sending troops to El Hecа to intercept Gen. Riera and prevent the junction of his troops with the revolutionists in the Barquisimeto district.

It is reported that Gen. Rolando has landed at Maturin, in the State of Bermudez. The revolutionists have cut the cable to Barcelona, and, consequently, the Venezuelan government is without news from Carupano.

The situation is said to be critical for President Castro. The Venezuelan fleet is not in condition to pursue the Bolivar and the plans of President Castro to capture her have failed.

JOHN DILLON SUSPENDED.

Result of an Exchange With Mr. Chamberlain.

London, March 22.—One of the liveliest scenes witnessed in the house of commons since the palmiest days of the Irish Nationals ended yesterday afternoon in the suspension of John Dillon.

During the discussion of South African affairs Mr. Chamberlain referred to the Boers who are fighting on the British side, when John Dillon (Irish Nationalist) interjected:

"They are traitors!"

On which Mr. Chamberlain retorted:

"The honorable gentleman is a good judge of traitors."

A scene of great confusion ensued. When order was partially restored Mr. Dillon demanded a ruling on Mr. Chamberlain's words. The speaker said:

"An honorable member spoke of soldiers serving under the British flag as traitors. I depricate the interruption and I depricate the retort of the other member."

Mr. Dillon then said:

"I will tell the right honorable gentleman that he is a damned liar."

A dead silence followed this remark. Such unparliamentary language seemed to stun the house. He declined to withdraw the expression, and on motion of Mr. Balfour he was suspended—248 to 98.

Mr. Dillon immediately, by direction of the speaker, left the house amid wild Nationalist cheers, and Mr. Chamberlain resumed his speech.

PROTECTING STUDENTS.

Saloonkeepers in Texas Must Not Sell to Pupils at Educational Institutions.

San Antonio, Tex., March 22.—Under a decision of the supreme court of Texas, just handed down, saloonkeepers may not sell liquor to students of educational institutions without laying themselves open to suit for damages. "Ragtime" Music Existed Centuries Before Our Time.

RAGTIME 2000 B.C.
MAY

"Call it what you will, and 'ragtime' is as good as any other noise," says Thomas Preston Brooke. "This 'ragtime' existed centuries before our time, and it will go on for centuries to come after we have been forgotten."

"Ragtime," its origin, its status, its merits and demerits, and its chances for perpetuation have been worrying musicians with long hair and the public having long purses ever since a popular song writer a few years ago claimed to have "invented" its rhythm.

When a discriminating public for public effect had jumped upon ragtime and its popularity with the hoi polloi, some one high in the musical world came forward in its defense, saying that some of the world's famous composers had used it in classic music; that technically it was syncopation, and under that name was worthy place in any composition. Yet still the long-haired musician and his followers are not reconciled.

In the Chicago Federation of Musicians there is a prospect of a split in the organization, leaving the players of the classic on the one side and the ragtime champions on the other. The long-haired men are refusing to associate with the ragtime men, and the situation is becoming acute.

At Denver last June the American Federation of Musicians at its annual convention passed a resolution condemning ragtime and recommending that its members cease playing it. In like measure the Dancing Teachers' association of America and the National Music Teachers' association are declared against it and pledged to discourage the use of ragtime in every manner possible.

But against all of this, Brooke's Chicago Marine Band at the Cincinnati Zoological Gardens last season gave "ragtime concerts" every Wednesday evening, and in spite of Cincinnati's reputation as a musical city, these concerts drew from 12,000 to 15,000 people to them every evening. At these concerts the best elements of Cincinnati's population were there, doubling the attendance at Wagner and Symphony concerts. At the Buffalo Exposition and in every other city in the United States and Canada where Brooke's band has played, 90 per cent of the requests for music have been for the rag-time selections.

RAGTIME IN ZULULAND

Mr. Brooke's standing as a composer of popular music has given him a voice to be heard on the subject. Especially is his opinion valuable when it is considered that not one bar of ragtime music occurs in his compositions, and that while he does not defend it, he makes it plain that ragtime music is with the people for all time. Mrs. James L. Blair, a society leader of St. Louis, declared in a public address last spring that the Missouri metropolis is a "ragtime" city, and in the following talk the bandmaster agrees with her as to all cities being in the category.

"Ragtime," said Mr. Brooke, "is now the most generally mooted of all themes among musicians. But why such a subject should threaten to disrupt the Chicago Federation of Musicians is rather difficult to understand when considered from an intelligent and unprejudiced standpoint.

"During the last year there have been published countless articles on ragtime, written by prominent musicians, teachers, and critics, many of whom had something to say about who "discovered" or "invented" it. Ragtime was not discovered or invented by anyone. Darwin says 'music was known and understood before words were spoken,' and I believe that ragtime existed in the lower animals long before the advent of man. It is simply rhythm, or intensified rhythm, and I have frequently observed animals keeping time to music having a strong, marked rhythm.

RAGTIME IN 1776
EM

"Rhythm is the skeleton on which all music is hung, and if you will strip the so-called modern ragtime of its melodies you will have the music that has been in vogue since the beginning of time and that still is the only music of many of the heathen races. It is the 'juber,' buck, and wing dances of the old plantation darky, and no more inspiring ragtime was ever played than that which he patted with his hands, shuffled with his feet, or plunked on his rudely constructed banjo.

"All the oldtime 'fiddlers' were ragtime performers. The backwoods player who sat perched on a barrel in a corner at a 'corn-husking bee,' who held his fiddle at his elbow and his bow at half-mast, played the 'Arkansaw Traveler' and 'Up Duck Creek' in a style that would put to shame many of the fellows who claim to have originated what they are pleased to call 'ragtime.'

"Drummers have played nothing but ragtime since the invention of the drum. The bass drum is now used only to punctuate or emphasize the heavy beats or pulse of the music, but in the original 'sheepskin band' that has furnished martial music for our soldiers in times of war for centuries the bass drummer used a stick in each hand and helped out the ragtime rhythm of the snare drum.

"Who has not stood on a curbstone, watching a passing parade, and noticed how wearily the men in line plodded along to the monotonous 1—1—1-2-3 of the bass drum? But when the snare drums broke into their merry ragtime beats of 'tat-t tat-a-tat' how the marchers immediately braced up and walked with a buoyant, elastic step?

"According to good authority the sense of rhythm is greater by 93 per cent than either the sense of harmony or melody. Consequently, any march with a strong rhythmic accent, or a ragtime song with its intensified rhythm, appeals more intensely to greater mankind.

"I have often been asked 'Why do you play so much ragtime at your concerts?' and I always reply that ragtime music is what is most demanded, and that my mission is to please—not to educate—the masses. It is not a crime to acknowledge that you enjoy ragtime. All the old masters wrote ragtime, and that great poet and wizard of harmony, Richard Wagner, was a pastmaster at it. It is a well-known fact that the themes for many of our most popular ragtime songs were taken bodily from his operas.

"I have always delighted in strong contrasts—from the sublime to the ridiculous, if you like—and I invariably follow "Tannhauser" or "Leonore" overtures with some little street song melody or ragtime march. It frequently happens that two persons will sit side by side at one of my concerts, one a lover of 'high-class' music the other with a desire only for the ragtime piece. By bringing the extremes in close contrast the grand old overtures seem grander and the street song sweeter and more entrancing.

"Why should any conductor refuse to play music which causes so much harmless pleasure?

"Ragtime is not a fad, as many have declared, and it will not 'die out.' It pleases the God-given sense of rhythm and will endure as long as the world shall stand. Call it what you will—ragtime is as good as any other name—it existed centuries before our time and it will go on for centuries to come after we have been forgotten."

Unknown Languages.

The aborigines of the Malabar Islands employ a perfect whistling language, by means of which they can communicate with each other over long distances. A stranger wandering over the islands is frequently surprised to hear from the hilltop the sound of loud whistling, which is quickly repeated on the next hill, and so is carried from summit to summit, until it dies away in the distance. But perhaps the most curious means of communication in the world is the drum language of the Congo tribe. These queer people can talk to each other with large drums made of bamboo hoops, over which the skin of some animal is stretched. The drum, however, is used only on important occasions.

Time will not make the great man, but he cannot be made without it.

RAGTIME IN SLAVERY DAYS.

RUSSIAN RAILWAY ACCIDENTS

In 1899 Averaged Twelve a Day, with 1,226 Killed and 3,860 Injured.

The Russian railways have always had an evil reputation for the great number of accidents, fatal and otherwise, annually recorded against them. Judging from some statistics just issued by the ministry of ways and communications, this unenviable notoriety would appear to be more or less well deserved.

The latest compiled data are for 1899, in which year there were 4,447 accidents, that is, on an average, a little more than twelve per diem. Of this total 1 362 were derailments, 750 collisions and 2,335 of various other descriptions. The derailments resulted in twenty-one deaths and 172 cases of serious personal injury; the damages incurred by those accidents were 552,861 rubles. The collisions were responsible for nineteen deaths, 238 cases of serious injury, and damage to the amount of 600,000 rubles. Other accidents resulted in the deaths of 1,146 persons and 2,665 cases of personal injury. Railway accidents unconnected with passenger traffic were responsible for thirty deaths and 3,860 cases of personal injury. Altogether 1,226 persons were killed and 6,993 injured.

During the twelve months under review there were not so-called serious railway accidents in England. If the trains, ordinary and express, in Russia were run at anything like the speed which obtains on English and French lines, says a London Standard correspondent, the number of fatalities would be at least tenfold greater, more especially in cases of derailment and collision. Railway traveling in Russia is proverbially slow, but by no means sure.

DELICIOUS NEW FRUIT.

It Is Called Dumbbell, and Tastes Like Peach Flavored with Pineapple.

The newest product of scientific gardening is the dumbbell fruit. It resembles a Siamese twin peach and tastes like a peach flavored with pineapple. It is said to be delicious—far surpassing any known fruit in the delicacy of its flavor.

There is a romance connected with the story of its cultivation. In the year 1886 a scientist named Jeffreys, embittered by an unfortunate love affair, turned his back on civilization, and, with a Cingalese servant, made his home on a small island 1,000 miles south of Ceylon. Here he remained until his death, in 1898, occupying himself with scientific studies and the cultivation of fruit trees. By grafting and other methods he produced several curious varieties, his most astonishing success being the dumbbell fruit.

After the death of Mr. Jeffreys the native servant took a few samples of the new fruit and set sail in a trading vessel for Bombay. The merchants to whom he showed his specimens at once formed a syndicate and have since been diligently cultivating the plantations.

Several ship loads have been sold in the seaport cities of Australia and India, and the syndicate is making preparations to meet an enormous demand next season. In London, where the dumbbell fruit has appeared this season in small quantities, it has met with much favor from those fortunate enough to obtain it. A suburban confectioner who concocted a new drink with the juice of the fruit did a thriving business.

HE FELT BETTER.

Because He Had Got Rid of the Cause of Disturbance.

Bishop Williams of Connecticut used to tell the following story of the late Dr. Ducachet: "One Sunday morning Dr. Ducachet arose feeling wretched. After a futile attempt to eat breakfast he called an old and favorite colored servant to him and said: 'Sam, go around and tell Simmons (the sexton) to post a notice on the church door that I am too ill to preach today.'

"'Now, massa,' said Sam, 'don't you gib up dat way. Just gib him a trial; you get 'long all right.'

The argument went on and resulted in the minister starting off. Service over, he returned to his house, looking much brighter.

"'How you feel, massa?' said Sam, as he opened the door.

"'Better; much better, Sam. I am glad I took your advice.'

"'I knew it; I knew it,' said the darky, grinning until every tooth was in evidence. 'I knew you feel better when you git dat sermon out o' your system.'"—New York Tribune.

Albert and Victoria.

Queen Victoria has set down in her journal her feelings after her wedding. "Oh, how I feel for my dearest, precious husband at this moment," she wrote. "Father, brother, friends, country—all has he left for me. God grant that I may be the happy person, the most happy person, to make this dearest, blessed being happy and contented! What is in my power to make him I will do." The proceedings in parliament on the eve of the marriage were not such as to make Prince Albert happy, and the queen's journal records her indignation at the course events took in the House of Commons. A long and heated discussion took place on the proposal to grant $250,000 a year to the prince, and ultimately the grant was limited to $150,000. Prince Albert learned of these things on his way to England and complained bitterly in a letter to the queen. "All I have to say," he concluded, "is that while I possess your love they cannot make me unhappy."

WHAT IT MEANS

REMARKABLE POSSIBILITIES OPENED BY THE RAILWAY MERGER.

NORTHWEST WILL PROFIT BY IT

ENORMOUS TRADE WITH THE ORIENT WHICH LIES WITHIN OUR GRASP.

NOT TO DESTROY COMPETITION

POTENTIAL BENEFICENCE OF THE ECONOMIC FORCES CALLED INTO PLAY.

Mr. J. J. Hill was recently reported by the New York Journal of Commerce as having said that the two mammoth ships he is building for the Asiatic trade could be operated in successful competition with foreign ships in spite of the higher wages paid to American seamen if our navigation laws permitted a better selection and control of crews. The reason for this confidence is plain. It is because he has applied to the construction of his vessels the same principles which have made the "Hill methods" of organizing transportation famous as one of the great money-saving inventions of the age—the simple principle that the bigger the trainload the less the cost of hauling it per ton per mile. He has made his ships bigger than any now afloat in the expectation that they will carry full cargoes and that it will cost but little more to operate them thus filled than smaller ships carrying a fraction of the tonnage.

These ships will carry cargoes at much lower freight rates than have heretofore prevailed, and are, therefore, the pioneers in the development of the Asiatic trade which will eventually require a larger fleet of similar ships. But to fill even these for regular trips will require the massing at the Pacific ports where they are to be loaded of a much larger volume of exports to Asia than has heretofore been offered. The traffic of the Great Northern alone would not suffice to sustain them. These ships are a constituent part of the arrangements whereby the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific and the Burlington systems are to be operated in harmony, and subsidiary to the same general end. The momentous significance of these arrangements can only be appreciated when it is understood that their purpose is to make these two great transcontinental railroads the chief highway of the commerce of this country and of the world with Asia. It is to carry out in the whole vast field of intercontinental traffic the same principle of concentration which Mr. Hill applies to his carloads and his ship's cargoes—to so increase the tonnage volume by concentration on this Northern route as to reduce its cost by land and sea, and thus—following the law that commerce always flows along the lines of least resistance—turn into this cheaper channel on the shorter lines of latitude the main stream of the commerce of the world. The full carload is thus the unit of power in a gigantic scheme of commercial concentration which will pour a new and more abounding flood of commercial and industrial energy into the six states which it has been recently sought to array against it.

The lawyers and politicians who have been fretting and fuming about the supposed effects of the so-called merger on local freight rates have been oblivious to the grandeur and potential beneficence of the economic forces called into play by this scheme, and which will insure a much greater reduction of local and transcontinental freight rates as a necessary consequence of an immensely increased volume of traffic than would otherwise be possible.

Our local statesmen are not to be blamed for the narrow local view they have taken of this question, or for their inability to take in the broad horizon of its world-wide relations. For but few who have not studied the question have any conception of the enormous trade with the Orient which lies within the grasp of American enterprise, but which for lack of an effective organization of our commercial power we have heretofore permitted other nations, and chiefly Great Britain, to appropriate. For the seven years ending with and inclusive of 1898 not an American steamship entered a Philippine port. Since the treaty of peace we have done better, but the major part of that traffic is still borne in English vessels. In the fifty-two years from 1848 to 1900, inclusive, the United States lost in their traffic with the Philippines over $275,000,000 in trade balances against us, or enough to have paid all the expenses of the Spanish war. And this does not take into account the Philippine goods carried to English or German ports and transhipped to this country.

In twenty years the United States has heretofore paid out over the counters of London, Berlin and Paris over a billion and a half of gold due Asiatic nations for trade balances. If this amount of money had been saved to the American people it would have bought out the steel trust and the Northern Securities company at their capitalized figures. In the ten years ending June 30, 1900, we have lost $120,000,000 in Chinese trade alone, exclusive of the trade of Hongkong, which is a warehouse for all China, under British auspices. And our ships have not carried 1 per cent of the foreign trade of China or of the port of Hongkong. The latest accessible tables of the treasury department concerning our sea trade show that of our imports from Asia in 1899, $74,000,000 came by way of the Atlantic ports and only $32,600,000 from the Pacific ports. Of our exports, $29,600,000 went from Atlantic ports and only $18,700,000 by way of Pacific coast ports, which means that 85 per cent of our trans-Pacific trade does not come to us by the way of the Pacific at all, but rather by the way of European ports, being transhipped at Liverpool and Hamburg for New York or Philadelphia. The total trade of China in 1899 was $121,600,000. Only $17,000,000 of this was carried in American bottoms.

Yet one line of steamships like that projected by Mr. Hill would very soon double that total and would put into Manila, Shanghai, Hongkong and other Chinese and Japanese ports agents for American trade that would soon make themselves felt in the interest of our manufacturers. The current of commercial exchanges thus established between the United States and the Orient would grow and widen until it drew into its swelling tide the tributary streams of every state in the Union and of every country in the world. All along the course of this great highway of the world's commerce this broad and deep current will set in motion the wheels of commercial and industrial activity. But it is mainly in Minnesota, whose chief cities, standing at the head of the great interior lines of water transit, are the terminal headquarters and gateways of these great systems of transcontinental railway, that its influence will be felt in making them far greater marts of trade than if they depended on the narrower range of tributary country around them. It will tend to make them the emporia for the distribution of the products of the Orient through the Mississippi valley. It will lift these cities and this state to a commanding position among the interior states and cities of the continent.

When the lawyers and politicians get to thinking about this matter in its larger relations they will probably come to the conclusion that there is something besides a question of local politics in this matter of the so-called merger—that it does not mean, as they imagine, the extinction of competition, but such a marshaling of commercial forces and such an organized concentration of commercial power as will enable this great system of transportation, traversing the northern belt of the temperate zone, which nature has marked as the chief path of commerce throughout the world, to enter into successful competition with the rival systems which are endeavoring to attract this great tide of transmundane commerce to more southern latitudes, and that, whatever technical objections the lawyers may find or fancy they find in "the mint and cummin" of the statutes, it is in conformity with that great economic law, to which all statutes must ultimately yield the right of way, that through concentration lies the only road to the highest economic efficiency—to lower costs and lower prices.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

CLEVELAND'S BIRTHDAY.

Former President Passes the Sixty-Fifth Mile Post.

Princeton, N. J., March 20.—Former President Grover Cleveland, who is now the only living ex-president of the United States, was sixty-five years old yesterday. Mr. Cleveland spent the whole day at his comfortable home on Bayard Lane with his wife and children. As he was confined to the house much of the winter on account of sickness he deemed it advisable, in consequence of the sudden change in the weather, to remain indoors and thus avoid any chance of another attack of illness.

FATAL STAB IN A RIOT.

Soldiers in Alabama in an Affray With Civilians.

Mobile, Ala., March 20. — A report was received here yesterday from Fort Morgan, Ala., at the entrance to Mobile bay, that a riot among soldiers and civilians occurred there Sunday night. One man was killed and ten or fifteen wounded. The man killed was Michael Kuehn, a discharged man whose home is at 506 Center street, Milwaukee. He was very popular with the men of the fort and there was much indignation and many threats of violence against Stewart, who was arrested with a bloody knife in his hand.

HEADED FOR NORTHWEST.

Three Thousand Dunkers and Other Fellows Coming.

Chicago, March 20.—During the next few days over 3,000 Dunkers and others will pass through Chicago en route to new homes in the Northwest. The movement will include entire families from Indiana, Ohio, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and they will for the most part go to the Mouse River district of North Dakota. Good crops in the Northwest last year and the glowing reports sent back by preceding settlers are the causes that have induced the present heavy immigration.

SENATORS TALK.

Direct Vote for Togawearers Is Discussed at Capitol.

Washington, March 20.—The senate committee on privileges and elections yesterday began consideration of the house resolution providing for the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people, but, beyond hearing the views of several members of the committee, made no progress. The committee decided to meet regularly hereafter, on Thursday of each week, and to continue the consideration of the question until a vote is reached.

DEATHS IN MANILA

CHOLERA CLAIMS THREE VICTIMS AND FRESH CASES ARE REPORTED.

AN EPIDEMIC IS NOT FEARED

RIGID SANITARY PRECAUTIONS THOUGHT TO HAVE AVERTED IT.

MOROS MAKE SOME TROUBLE

ATTACK A FORCE OF AMERICANS AND CAPTURE TRANSPORTATION.

Manila, March 25.—Five new cases of cholera and three deaths from the disease were reported here yesterday. Five persons who are suspected of having the disease are under observation at Malolos, Province of Bulacan.

The general situation regarding cholera is considered to be encouraging. The health authorities believe that their rigid precautions have averted an epidemic.

As Gen. Chaffee did not want the men of the Third infantry to run the risk of cholera as a result of contact with the city, that regiment has already been taken aboard the United States transport Grant, which will sail for San Francisco one week ahead of the scheduled time.

Brig. Gen. G. W. Davis, stationed at Zambonaga, Mindanao, reports that a detachment of the signal corps consisting of seventeen men had been attacked by 200 Moros near Paran Paran, Mindanao. One of the signal corps men was killed. The Moros captured the transportation of the detachment, including four pack mules.

The governor of La Union province reports that out of a population of 100,000 persons only 22 are confined in the municipal jails. Not a hostile shot has been fired in the province in twenty-two months. Foreigners travel everywhere and meet with no molestation.

BIG STRIKE IMMINENT.

Demand of Lowell Millworkers for More Pay Is Refused.

Lowell, Mass., March 25.—Lowell is threatened with one of the greatest strikes in its history as a result of the communication sent to the textile union by the mill agents in reply to the official demand of that body for an advance in wages for the textile operatives of the city. The communication was read at the meeting of the textile council yesterday afternoon and was a positive unconditional refusal of the demands. It was not a joint note, but each agent answered for himself. The language, however, was identical. The increase demanded was to have gone into effect to-day, but because of the delay in the reply the various unions represented in the central body have not had an opportunity to express their views on the new aspect of the situation, so it has been decided to postpone final action until a meeting Wednesday evening next. Meantime special meetings of the unions will be held and a vote will be taken on the question of a strike. An informal vote was taken yesterday and it was said that three-fourths of the number present favored a strike, the others reserving their decision until Wednesday night.

JAMES WILCOX FOUND GUILTY.

North Carolinan Sentenced to Expiate With Life Murder of Sweetheart.

Elizabeth City, N. C., March 25. — James Wilcox was found guilty of the murder of Nellie Cropsey. The jury, after being out thirty hours, brought in a verdict of guilty in the first degree. The prisoner heard the verdict without apparent emotion. When the verdict had been received Judge Jones said: "It is sadder for me than for you, Mr. Wilcox. The jury found the facts, I gave the law. You have had a fair trial. Part of the public were afraid to give it to you. The judgment of the court is that the prisoner be removed to jail and be hanged dead by the neck on April 25."

SEES DELAY AT ST. LOUIS.

Gov. Dockery of Missouri Predicts Postponement.

St. Louis, March 25. — Gov. A. M. Dockery of Missouri has joined the ranks of the doubting Thomases who prophesy that the Louisiana Purchase exposition will not be held in 1903. In a letter to a contemplating exhibitor recently the governor wrote as follows: "The Missouri board of fair commissioners has taken no action in reference to the creation of departments for the exposition or the appointment of superintendents of such departments. It seems now to me that the fair probably will not be held in 1903, therefore the delay."

FIVE CONVICTS CREMATED.

Make Desperate Attempt to Escape by Burning Their Way Out.

Kosciusko, Miss., March 25. — Five county convicts made an attempt Saturday night to burn their way out of prison, burning the stockade house in which they were confined down over their heads, and cremating themselves. They were all negroes and named as follows: Bob Burt, Phil Newell, Jim Culberson, Amos Rainford and Jim Jones. The prisoners were let out to Robert Campbell, county contractor, whose farm is situated sixteen miles west of this place, and all were charged with minor offenses.

Wife Kills Husband Who Was Choking Her.

Washington, Ind., March 25.—During a quarrel at the supper-table last evening Liberty Kempf, a well known business man, brutally choked his wife. The woman managed to get a revolver and fired five shots at the husband, one bullet penetrating the brain. He died in a few moments. The wife told the story to the police and has not yet been arrested.

TELEPHONE BETWEEN TRAINS.

Michigan Man Demonstrates Feasibility of His Invention.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 25—Benson Bidwell has successfully demonstrated here the feasibility of telephoning from a moving electric car without regard to the speed attained or the noise incident to the moving car. In the presence of several prominent men Mr. Bidwell, the inventor, and his brother, Charles F. Bidwell, made the demonstration with marked success. They used three cars, which were put at their service by the Grand Rapids Railway company, and the passengers on the cars had no difficulty in talking from one car to the other no matter how fast the cars were going. Mr. Bidwell in an interview said: "Our plans are to equip steam railways with this system of 'phones,' wherein any train on the line will be at all times in talking connection with the train dispatcher and with every other train on the road. The utility of the system can be better understood when I explain that these same telephone wires can be used for all telegraph purposes required of two telegraph wires by the railway company, even to having the telegraph instruments in the cars, and the same operator who has charge of the telephone can do the telegraphing."

KILLED BY AN EXPLOSION.

Fire in a Farmhouse Sets Off Some Dynamite.

Houghton, Mich., March 25.—A terrible explosion of dynamite occurred near Oskar, eight miles north of here, yesterday, resulting in the death of two men and serious injury to another. The scene of the explosion was in the house of John Boullard. The building caught fire while the family was at church, and when the heat became intense two boxes of dynamite which were stored away for blowing up stumps, exploded. Jenkala and Kellinen were killed by being struck by flying timbers. They were neighbors of Boullard and met death while fighting the flames.

ARRESTED AT CHURCH DOOR.

Man Charged With Forgery and Fraudulent Use of the Mails.

Pittsburg, March 25. — As he was walking out of a church yesterday at Wilkinsburg, Lewis Strayer, an insurance agent employed by the Prudential Life Insurance company of this city, was arrested by a city detective and Postoffice Agent O'Brien on a charge of forgery and using the mails for fraudulent purposes. He confessed to having forged at least one check and the detectives think he is one of the leaders of a gang who have literally flooded this city and New York with bogus checks of amounts ranging from $15,000 to $35,000. Heretofore Mr. Strayer has been a respected citizen of Wilkinsburg.

KENTUCKY MAN DIES GAME.

With a Bullet in His Heart He Takes a Last Shot at His Slayer.

Henderson, Ky., March 25. — A fatal shooting occurred at Corydon, this county, yesterday, in which Green W. Pritchett was killed and John Below, a farmer, fatally wounded. Bad blood existed between the two men over business, and when they met on the streets yesterday Pritchett shot Below and Below shot Pritchett. With a bullet through his heart Pritchett fired a third shot at Below, but missed. He then fell and expired. Pritchett was one of the wealthiest men of the section. He was an extensive land owner and tobacconist. The coroner's verdict exonerated Below.

STRIKE MAY BE AVOIDED.

Pennsylvania Coal Miners Are Moving Cautiously.

Shamokin, Pa., March 25.—From an official source it was learned yesterday that an effort will be made to-day to adjourn the joint convention of Districts No. 1, 7 and 9, United Mineworkers of America, without committing the delegates to a strike declaration. At a meeting which began at 11 o'clock Saturday night and continued until yesterday morning the special committee appointed Saturday formulated a resolution which the leaders hope will satisfy both radical and conservative delegates.

WRECKED BY LANDSLIDE.

Two Men Are Killed and Six Coaches Completely Destroyed.

TWO DOCTORS FLY

DEATH OF A YOUNG LADY AT A SANITARIUM CAUSES SENSATION.

PERFORM CRIMINAL OPERATION

PERITONITIS SETS IN AND DEATH FOLLOWS IN A SHORT TIME.

POLICE CAPTURE THE NURSE

BUT THE DOCTORS HAVE IMPORTANT CASES ELSEWHERE.

New York, March 25.—Marie C. Norris of Lake Waramaug, New Preston, Conn., died on Saturday afternoon in Dr. Francis Gray Blinn's "sanitarium" at 165 West Forty-seventh street under such suspicious circumstances that the police of the West Forty-seventh street station were called in by the woman's parents. Dr. Blinn and a nurse in his employ fled from the house. The nurse was arrested at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, but the police are still looking for her employer.

Benjamin and Harriet C. Norris, the young woman's parents, own a small summer hotel at Lake Waramaug. She was an oly daughter, was thirty-five years old and unmarried. On Thursday night she told her parents that she had decided to in Danbury, and left home early on Friday morning. She came here, reaching Dr. Blinn's sanitarium about noon.

Mr. Norris first knew that his daughter was not in Danbury on Saturday noon, when he received a telegram signed "Marie" stating that she was ill with appendicitis at 165 West Forty-seventh street. Norris and his wife took the next train to this city. They had telegraphed to W. H. Bonyange, a lawyer at 149 Broadway, who had spent the summer at their hotel, and he met them at the Grand Central station. They reached there at 9 o'clock on Saturday night. Their daughter had died in the afternoon.

Found Her Dead.

The Norrises, with Lawyer Bonynge, went at once to Dr. Blinn's. There they met the physician, the nurse, Bertha Craig, and Dr. W. H. Oyler. The nurse told them that Miss Norris was dead. Dr. Blinn called Mrs. Norris into his private office and started to explain the case.

"I don't want to hear it alone," said Mrs. Norris. "My husband and lawyer are with me. Call them and let them hear, too."

Dr. Blinn told them all that he was very sorry, but he had an important case which would call him out for an hour. He would be back at 11 o'clock, he said, and he and hat and went out. Late last night he had not returned. A few minutes later Dr. Oyler announced that he would go, too, and he went home. Then Nurse Craig volunteered to look for both physicians and she left the house. Lawyer Bonynge said that it was all very strange and that he would notify the police. He went over to the West Forty-seventh street station, where he got Capt. Donohue and Detectives Fitzgerald and Dale.

Capt. Donohue had the woman's body removed to the police station and later sent it to the morgue where an autopsy was made by Coroner O'Hanlon. The woman, he said, died of peritonitis following a criminal operation.

Thirty of the rioters were killed and one soldier was wounded.

CONGRESS.

Protection of the President Under Consideration in the Senate.

Washington, March 20. — During the entire session of the senate yesterday the bill providing for the protection of the president of the United States was under consideration. Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin contended that the government had an absolute an inherent right to protect itself against assaults made either upon itself or upon any of its officers. He maintained that an assault on the president was in the very nature of things an assault on the government, for there never was a time when the president was not in the exercise of the duties of his office.

Mr. Hoar, in charge of the measure, elucidated some arguments he had made previously and Mr. Teller of Colorado and Mr. Bailey of Texas spoke briefly upon the bill. The Texas senator said he could not support the measure as it stands because he could conceive of an assault made upon the president as a person and not as an official of the government. An assailant in that event ought to be punished precisely as if he had assaulted any other citizen.

In the House.

The house yesterday made fair progress with the river and harbor bill. After the close of general debate 27 of the 116 pages of the bill were disposed of. No amendments were adopted. The general debate was featureless.

Possibility as a Successor to Secretary Hitchcock.

Washington, March 21. — The Post says: It is understood that ex-Senator Edward Oliver Wolcott of Denver, Colo., is being considered by the president as the possible successor of Secretary Hitchcock, who, it is understood will soon retire from the cabinet. Mr. Wolcott was seriously considered for the interior department at the time of McKinley's second inauguration, when it was thought probable that Secretary Hitchcock would retire. At that time, it was also understood, he was willing to accept the honor. The death of the brother of Secretary Hitchcock on Tuesday caused the rumors that the cabinet member from Missouri was to retire to be more persistent than for several days. It is believed the attention of the secretary will now be in demand at home in settling up his brother's estate.

The minority report, which was presented by Senator Kittredge, completely upholds the title of the new Panama company.

SUCKERS FLEECED

POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT GETS AFTER A PHILADELPHIA CONCERN.

PROFIT OUT OF EARNEST MONEY

OFFICERS HELD ON CHARGE OF USING MAILS TO DEFRAUD AND CHEAT.

DEALT IN WORTHLESS BOOKS

AGENTS MAKE DEPOSIT AS AN EXPRESSION OF GOOD FAITH.

Philadelphia, March 21. — Charles L. Graham, president of the People's Publishing company; William L. Holloway, former manager of the company, and George Y. Clements, former assistant manager, were held in $2,000 bail each for trial on the charge of using the mails to cheat and defraud.

The charge was preferred by Postoffice Inspector Holden, who testified at the hearing to-day that the People's company had been for a long time past been making a practice of securing agents for the sale of alleged worthless books.

He said they employed canvassers and general agents to dispose of their publications. It is alleged that the sum of $900 is asked for from the agents, with the understanding that it is to be used as a deposit, as an expression of good faith, for one year's time. At the expiration of the year, if the agreement is found to be unsatisfactory, the deposit

Money Is to Be Returned.

According to letters received by the postoffice authorities from Prof. L. R. Thomas of Wilkinsburg, Pa.; F. D. Owens of Knoxville, George Spiney of Pittsburg, and many others, this agreement has not been adhered to.

The alleged victims assert that when they receive the books they find them valueless for canvassing.

William L. Holloway and George Y. Clements recently went out of the People's Publishing company and started a concern of their own called the "Dominion company." The books of the People's Publishing company are, as stated, alleged to be valueless, and the business of the general agents of the defendants in securing other subagents is said to have netted them $25,000, as far as is at present known by the postal authorities.

BOY THIRSTS FOR GORE.

Kills Animals Just to See Them Die.

Ithaca, N. Y., March 21.—A story comes to Ithaca from Nunda of the strange thirst for blood which a nine-year-old lad named Darley Mornes is possessed. The little fellow was taken from a home for homeless children in Pittsburg by kind Mrs. Nancy Redmond, who intended to adopt him. Mrs. Redmond runs a farm near Nunda and she thought it would be a nice home for the little fellow. His mania was to kill animals about the farm, and Darley had not been about a week before he had made his presence felt. In one day he killed ten sheep and the next day he invaded the hen coop and deliberately murdered fifty chickens. To accomplish his purpose he used a big hammer, and his mode of operation was to hit the animals on the head with this effective weapon. The discovery of the boy's crime was made by a neighbor, Elgie Shaw. With his gun in hand, he went to Mrs. Redmond's shed to learn the cause of the commotion among the sheep. Upon entering he saw young Mornes raise his hammer in the air and brain a sheep. After he had done this the lad looked up, saw the gun and, crying "Don't shoot!" he ran to the house and then made a full confession. He said that he had killed the animals just to see them die.

MILL WORKERS WORRIED.

Patent Mill That Will Throw Many Out of Work.

Pittsburg, March 21. — Millworkers are much wrought up over the report that has been current on the South side this week that thousands of rollers will be thrown out of employment by a newly patented rolling mill. The new mill is black plates, or what is known as continuous, and will roll sheets the same as the continuous mills do to rod mills. At the present time sheets are run through separate mills, and each one of the mills has seven men at work on it. The new mill is made up of a number of rolls and is so arranged that the hot bar is placed in one end, goes through the entire mill unassisted, and comes out of the other in finished sheets. The new mill will do the work of twenty of the present mills, it is asserted, and this means that each of the new mills will do away with between 130 and 140 men. Only two men will be necessary to operate the new invention.

MILES IS RILED

WILL RESIGN IF CONGRESS PASSES BILL ORGANIZING GENERAL STAFF.

OPPOSES SECRETARY ROOT'S PLAN

TELLS COMMITTEE IT WOULD DESTROY THE UNITY OF THE ARMY.

THE PRESIDENT MAY RETIRE HIM

HAVING PASSED AGE OF SIXTY-TWO HE CAN BE PLACED ON THE SHELF.

Washington, March 22.—Gen. Nelson A. Miles yesterday told the senate committee on military affairs that if the bill introduced by Senator Hawley, at the instance of the war department, for the organization of a general staff for the army should become a law, he would decline longer to hold his commission. The reason he gave for the statement is that the bill is utterly subversive of the interests of the military establishment, and he said that he would not be a party to such a proceeding to the extent even of continuing to hold his place.

The statement was made in the course of a prolonged hearing by the committee, which was conducted behind closed doors, and in which Gen. Miles touched upon a variety of subjects connected with the army.

Destroy Unity of the Army.

Gen. Miles said that if this provision should become a law it would have the effect of destroying the unity of the army, and he read numerous authorities, including Napoleon, Wellington, Cass and Grant to show the necessity of having one head to the army and of controlling authority. His own experience and observation had, he said, had the effect of confirming these views. Warming up somewhat he asserted that the bill was calculated to accomplish no purpose except to allow the secretary of war and the adjutant general to promote the interests of their personal favorites.

President May Retire Him.

Miles' threat to resign may be followed by an order for his retirement. The president has it in his power to do this, as under the law he may place upon the retired list any officer who has passed the age of sixty-two years. Gen. Miles will be sixty-three years old next August. Unless sooner retired by the president he will remain at least nominally at the head of the army till August, 1903, when he retires for age.

As to the question whether Gen. Miles had said anything which would require action at the hands of the department or the president, Secretary Root yesterday firmly declined to express any opinion, for the present at least, preferring to await the official copy of the committee hearing before reaching any decision.

Vote on the Bill to Protect the President Will Be Reached To-Day.

Washington, March 21.—Throughout yesterday's session of the senate the bill providing for the protection of the president of the United States was under discussion. Just before adjournment an agreement was reached to vote on the measure and pending amendments at 4 o'clock to-day. The speeches in the main were a reinforcement of arguments that have been advanced heretofore, few new points being raised. The principal point made by the opponents of the measure was that federal officials ought to be treated in the courts precisely as are other citizens. Three substitutes for the bill are pending and will be pressed when the voting begins to-day.

In the House.

The house yesterday made very slow progress on the river and harbor bill, disposing of only thirty pages and leaving fifty pages still to be considered. The river and harbor committee again succeeded in defeating every amendment offered.

Alleged Would-Be Train Wrecker Tries to Kill Himself.

St. Joseph, Mich., March 22.—Herbert Cook of New Buffalo, Mich., the boy who is in the county jail on the charge of attempting to wreck a Michigan Central passenger train, will become a raving maniac unless he is taken from jail. Since he was lodged in jail Tuesday he has not partaken of food and declares that he will starve himself to death. Cook yesterday morning secured a bottle of medicine from a fellow convict and swallowed the contents, believing it to be poison. Later in the day when he became satisfied that he was not going to die, he pleaded with Jonas Sandemann, another prisoner, to cut his throat. Sheriff Collins has tried in vain to make the prisoner eat, but he has failed, and it is feared that Cook will go insane or die from starvation before he appears for trial next month.

The purse contained $17, a bunch of keys and some professional cards. The next morning Mrs. Beachy received through the mail a carefully wrapped package containing her purse and her keys, but no money. A little later $1 was received by mail from some unknown source. Since then a dollar has come regularly each month.

WOMAN'S TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

Found Unconscious After Remaining Two Days and Two Nights in Mud and Mire.

Battle Creek, Mich., March 23.—Frozen for two days and two nights in mud and mire and yet alive is the record set by Mrs. Henry Tretherick of Sonoma, five miles south of this city.

Mrs. Tretherick started Wednesday for the home of Mrs. Fells, a sister, five miles from Sonoma. Yesterday, when it was learned she had not been at Mrs. Fells,' a searching party was organized. She was found half buried in mire and mud at the edge of Mud lake. Her hands and feet were frozen, but she was breathing slightly, though unconscious. Doctors say, however, that there is some hope for her recovery. It is supposed she became entangled in the mire and was unable to free herself.

GERMANS PASS IT UP.

Very Little Now Said About Henry's Visit to the United States.

Berlin, March 23.—Striking indeed is the way in which the gossip of Prince Henry's trip has been allowed to drop on this side of the water. While the papers give much space to all kinds of dull subjects, the prince's arrival is little more than casually noted. Many of the papers have nothing to say at all. The cartoonist is hard at work, and almost each day some new caricature comes out minimizing the value of Prince Henry's visit or making fun of it.

EXIT SCHLEY CASE.

House Naval Committee Acts in Accord With the Recommendations of the President.

Washington, March 27 — The house committee on naval affairs by a vote of 7 to 4 adopted a resolution concurring in the conclusions of President President Roosevelt as to terminating the agitation of the Schley controversy and indefinitely postponing all bills and resolutions on the subject.

Negro Convicted.

Des Moines, Iowa, March 23.—Albert Smith, a negro aged twenty, was convicted of murder in the second degree for killing Bruce Martin in a saloon riot Feb. 2. The weapon used was an end gate. Mrs. Martin had entered the saloon a few moments before and begged her husband to accompany her home.

Reducing the Shortage.

Indianapolis, March 23. — Arthur Simpson's supposed shortage of $70,000 is less than $10,000, according to charges made against him. Simpson maintains that he did not receive one cent from the forged drafts on which was arrested. He is out on $2,000 bonds. He was a bookkeeper of a stock yards company.

New Straw Stacked.

Goldfield, Iowa, March 23. — George Worley of this place has secured a patent on a straw stacker that is superior to those now on the market in that it does not break the straw in small pieces. No more power is required to operate it than is used for the ordinary old style saddle stacker.

Miners Expect Settlement.

Des Moines, Iowa, March 23. — The joint conference of Iowa miners and operators will hold a special meeting to-day, at which the joint scale committee will meet with the entire delegate body and an especial effort will be made to effect an agreement.

Colored Man Hanged.

Moundsville, W. Va., March 23.—Geo. Carter, colored, was hanged here last night in the penitentiary for the murder of Virgil Whistler. He walked steadily to the gallows singing a hymn. He said he was ready to die.

TO HELP THE BURLINGTON.

Iowa Legislature Passes the Molsberry Bill.

Des Moines, Iowa, March 22. — The Molsberry bill, empowering railway corporations to contract indebtedness in excess of two-thirds of their capital stock, yesterday passed the house and will now become a law if signed by the governor. It is principally in the interests of the Burlington, which is now an Iowa corporation, and it is understood desires to issue more bonds. The house yesterday passed the Nagle bill, prohibiting Sunday football and baseball playing.

The senate passed the Hammann bill, conferring upon trolley lines the rights now possessed by steam roads, and in addition permitting them to run along the public roads in the country, if the property owners consent.

The Hufschmidt bill, making the compensation of official papers 33 cents per ten lines of brevier, was passed, the former action of the house being reconsidered.

The house committee on insurance recommended for passage the bill creating a state insurance department.

EXPECT GREAT FLOOD.

Pierre Reports Big Rise in the Missouri.

Chamberlain, S. D., March 22.—Water began rising in the Missouri river at about 6 o'clock last evening and had increased about two feet at 8 o'clock, since which time it has been practically stationary, with a moderate current. As the weather was very warm yesterday there is nothing in this increase but what might be easily accounted for by the melting of ice and snow in the river bed and snow tributary to the river, and it is not believed that the great gorge has given away. The five-foot rise reported from Pierre will undoubtedly destroy the gorge and some time to-day a large flood should reach this point.

SOUTH DAKOTA GOLD FIND.

Lightning Creek Yields Free Gold for Past Eight Years.

Custer, S. D., March 22.—John Bueter has been taking out numerous free gold specimens on his ground, situated on Lightning creek, seven miles west of Custer. He has been picking up excellent float on the ground for the last six or eight years, and has discovered a number of small gash veins of white quartz showing free gold, but they have pinched out, as they went down. It is believed that he now has the main ledge. It has good width, and one of the walls has been located. Mr. Bueter has not had time to disclose the other wall.

MAJ. FLEMING DIES.

Pioneer Mason of North Dakota Expires at Fargo Home.

Fargo, N. D., March 22.—Maj. Rufus E. Fleming died yesterday morning at 7 o'clock of erysipelas. He was sixty-three years old and had been a resident of North Dakota twenty years. He owned a large farm near Wheatland in this county and was interested in various other enterprises, but it was in Masonic circles that he was best known. He was a thirty-third degree Mason and had been inspector general for North Dakota for many years.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Couple Die Violent Deaths as Result of Husband's Insane Jealousy.

Duluth, Minn., March 22. — John Banchi of Hibbing yesterday shot his wife dead and then turned the weapon on himself with fatal results. Jealousy on the part of the man inspired the deed. They had kept a boarding house and originally came from Michigan.

Well-Known Lawyer Dead.

St. Paul, March 22.—Henry J. Horn, one of the best known members of the St. Paul bar, died at St. Luke's hospital last evening. Mr. Horn was eighty-one years old. He had been in poor health for the past few years and suffered intensely. About ten days ago an operation was decided upon as a last resort, and Mr. Horn was removed to St Luke's hospital. His advanced age was against him, however, and he sank steadily until he died last evening.

Dakota County Teachers.

Farmington, Minn., March 22.—At an executive meeting of the Dakota County Educational association it was decided to hold the regular annual meeting April 25 and 26. Among the speakers are State Superintendent Olson, Supt. Lewis of Hastings, Supt. Kunze of Red Wing and Dr. Ralph St. J. Perry of Farmington.

No Discrimination.

Des Moines, Iowa, March 22. — The senate has passed the bill repealing the provision for a discriminative tax on the business of foreign insurance companies and fixed the tax at 2 1-2 per cent on gross premiums, the same percent as paid by American companies. Only five senators voted against the proposition.

In the Corn Belt.

Britton, S. D., March 22.—G. V. Dawson of Marshall county has shipped 450 bushels of corn to Fargo, for which he received $1 a bushel. He planted forty acres to corn the past season, the yield from which was between 900 and 1,000 bushels.

PEACE IN SIGHT?

BOER OFFICIALS UNDER FLAG OF TRUCE CONFER WITH KITCHENER.

BRITISH HOPES ARE RAISED

CAN SEE NOTHING BUT ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO NEGOTIATE FOR PEACE.

BOER POSITION IS HOPELESS

CLOSELY PRESSED BY BRITISH COLUMNS AT RHENOSTER KOP.

Pretoria, March 25.—Acting President Schalkburger, F. W. Reitz, ex-secretary of state of the Transvaal, and Commandants Lucas, Meyer, and Krogh, with their secretaries and attendants, arrived here March 22 at 2:04 p. m. on a special train from Balmoral, about fifty miles east of here. They came into Balmoral under a flag of truce.

Upon arrival Mr. Schalkburger and his party drove immediately to Lord Kitchener's headquarters, where he had an interview with the British general. The Boers afterward proceeded to the railway station and entrained at 5 o'clock for Kroonstad, where they will go out under a safe conduct. For a week past Mr. Schalkburger and his colleagues have been stationed at Rhenoster kop, north of Balmoral, where they have been closely pressed by the British columns. Dispatch riders entered Balmoral Friday night and notified the British of the approach of Mr. Schalkburger and his party.

It is reported that the Boer position at Rhenoster kop had become almost hopeless and that Mr. Schalkburger once narrowly escaped capture.

To Negotiate for Peace.

London, March 25. — The news that the wandering Boer "government" had entered the British lines is regarded as having but one meaning, namely, that another attempt is being made to negotiate peace. The fact that the censor passed the news of this movement is accepted as confirmation of this opinion. Nothing is actually known here of the intentions of Messrs. Schalkburger, Reitz, Meyer and Krogh. It is possible they have only sought permission to traverse the British lines in order to consult with Mr. Steyn and the Boer generals, Dewet and Delarey. But whatever their object, the news has been welcomed in London as pointing to the possibility of peace. Some correspondence which was captured a short time ago when Mr. Steyn narrowly escaped capture proved that he and Mr. Schalkburger were anxious to conclude peace. No extravagant hopes, however, are being built on the outcome of the movements of Mr. Schalkburger and his companions, chiefly because it is feared that Delarey, in the flush of his recent success, will refuse to be a party to any negotiations.

Overtures From British.

Brussels, March 25.—The Petit Bleu, referring to the arrival at Pretoria of Messrs. Schalkburger, Reitz, Meyer and Krogh, says it believes that Mr. Schalkburger's move is in response to fresh British overtures for peace, made out of gratitude for the release of Gen. Methuen, and predicts that these overtures will lead to no results unless Boer independence is guaranteed.

CZAR AND AMEER FLIRT.

Russia Sends Troops Into Neighborhood of Afghanistan on Receipt of Messages.

London, March 25.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from St. Petersburg says there is good ground for believing that the ameer of Afghanistan has recently shown a leaning toward Russia, which may have important results in the future. The Russian government recently received very important telegrams from Turkestan, which the ameer's plenipotentiary sent to the governor general. The latter's precise mission is not known, but immediate instructions were issued to two Caucasian regiments to proceed to Central Asia.

ELECTION ANNULLED.

Managua, Nicar., March 25. — President Zelaya has accepted an invitation from the president of Costa Rica, Senor Iglesias, to visit Limon, Costa Rica, in order to confer on matters pertaining to the proposed Nicaragua canal. WORST ON RECORD.

Two Thousand Deaths Daily From the Plague in Lahore.

London, March 25. — A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company from Lahore says that the plague mortality has reached 2,000 daily. The outbreak, which is the worst on record, is attributed to the policy of non-interference in caste customs.

NO ASIATIC DANGER.

Russian Government Grants Alexeieff Leave of Absence.

London, March 25. — A dispatch to the Morning Post from Berlin says that Admiral Alexeieff, commander-in-chief of the land and sea forces in Russian East Asia, has been granted leave of absence for several months. This is construed as proof that the situation in the Far East is regarded at St. Petersburg as being free from any likelihood of complication.

HONORS IOWA HEROES.

One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars Appropriated for the Purpose.

Des Moines, Iowa, March 20. — The house yesterday afternoon passed the bill appropriating $150,000 for the erection of monuments to the Iowa regiments that fought at Vicksburg. Two other special bills were passed by the house, one for the creating of a committee to place the Des Moines police and fire departments under the civil service, and another completely revising the road laws of the state making the township the unit and providing that road tax shall be paid in cash. The senate passed the Lister child labor bill, providing that children under fourteen shall not be permitted to work more than six hours per day in any factory and must be in school at least twelve weeks in the year.

FEW LIVES HAVE BEEN LOST.

Fatalities in the Snowstorm Not as Heavy as Feared.

Fargo, March 20.—Reports are being received from the interior of the state showing that, while there was considerable suffering from the storm, few lives were lost. The report that a family of four people perished near Minot is denied. Near Balfour a sixteen-year-old Russian boy named Korrium was badly frozen. Reports received from the Standing Rock Indian reservation say that two Indians were found frozen to death and that many dead cattle were seen on the prairie, having perished in the storm. A report from Wilton says that fifteen out of one band of sixteen head of cattle were found dead after the storm. The railroads are recovering from the effects of the storm.

BIG BLOCKADE BROKEN.

Trains Moving Again After Ninety-Six Hours' Delay.

St. Paul, March 20—The longest snow blockade in the history of the northern coast lines was raised at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when telegraphic advices from Rugby Junction announced that the Great Northern main line was clear again. The Northern Pacific opened the blockade section west of Mandan in the afternoon, but the Soo-Pacific route is still tied up, although operating officials expect to have the through trains moving on regular schedule to-day. The blockade lasted ninety-six hours, during which not an overland train crossed North Dakota, either east or west-bound. Freight traffic was absolutely blockaded and many trains were left to "die" on side tracks.

INDIANS ARE FROZEN.

Two Redskins Found Dead on the Prairie Near Standing Rock.

Bismarck, N. D., March 20.—Reports from Standing Rock reservation state that two Indians were frozen to death and that many dead cattle were seen on the prairie, having perished in the storm. Another report from Wilton says fifteen out of one band of sixty head of cattle were found dead after the storm. It seems impossible that the unsheltered homeseekers known to be out in the storm could have all escaped.

CERTAINLY A MIRACLE.

Windlassman Falls Down the Laura Shaft at Virginia, Minn.

Duluth, Minn., March 20. — One of the most remarkable escapes from instant death, or at least terrible injuries, is reported by Capt. M. L. Fay of Virginia, Minn. Last Saturday Jacob Jacobson, a windlassman at the Laura shaft, one of the Fay Exploration company's properties, fell a distance of sixty-nine feet, landing on the taconic rock bottom and escaped, not only with his life, but without any broken bones or even severe bruises.

SORROW OF A FATHER.

Coming From Washington to Visit His Son He Will Find Him Dead.

Faribault, Minn., March 20. — Alexander Davis of Spokane, Wash., a member of the senior class of Shattuck school, died Sunday of meningitis. He was nineteen years of age. The boy's father was on his way to the school to visit him, but his train was blockaded in North Dakota in Sunday's blizzard and he has not reached here yet. The remains will be taken home when the father arrives.

FIRST PRIMARY ELECTION.

St. Paul Voters Select Candidates for Municipal Officers.

St. Paul, March 20.—This city's first experience with the new primary election system resulted in the selection of the following candidates for the various offices: Mayor, F. B. Doran, Rep., R. A. Smith, Dem.; controller, J. J. McCardy, Rep., Louis Betz, Dem.; treasurer, J. H. Wolterstorff, Rep., Otto Bremer, Dem. Candidates for aldermen and assemblymen were also selected.

BURGLAR CUTS HIMSELF.

Trunk in South Dakota Hotel Is Cut Into and $80 Taken.

Sturgis, S. D., March 20.—Burglars entered the Charles hotel of this city and cut the woodwork around a lock on a trunk and secured between $70 and $80 in cash. Nothing was taken but the money. The party doing the work must have cut himself quite badly, as considerable blood on the cover of the trunk indicated, and may be the cause of his capture.

Succeeded by Sullivan.

Red Wing, Minn., March 20.—E. J. North, who lost his position at the state training school because of alleged cruelty to boys in his charge has been succeeded by E. F. Sullivan of Faribault as manager of cottage No. 1 and bandmaster.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XXII—(Continued.)

"Olive"—he bent his head towards her and put into his voice and into his words all the earnestness he could command—"I swear to you that I am dying. Remember the time when first you came to this house to find me; remember they told you that I was dead. It was not true; put your lips to mine, and tell me if you touch my lips or not—tell me that they are flesh and blood! Listen again! I have been put into this place in order that the bright flames you see all about us may reach me and lick away my life. Olive—for the love of all the old days, come back to life—come back to love!"

She heard—she understood; there swept in upon her, like light, the awful nature of the danger, the reality of what was happening. It was a real and living woman, with fear and love knocking hard at her heart, that clung about the neck of Gilbert Rickerby and turned a face of horror to the flames that were roaring about them.

"Quick!" he whispered. "There—where the flames are least—by the dressing table—you'll find a razor there—get it—hack at these ropes. Oh, thank God, thank God, whatever happens, you have come back to me! Quick!"

She darted across to the table; he saw her through the smoke, tossing things wildly in all directions; she came back in a moment with something bright in her hands. Sobbing with excitement and anxiety and love and joy and all combined, she bent over and slashed away at the ropes which bound him to the bedstead. When he was free he staggered forward and fell upon his knees, trembling as though with an ague.

She ran again to the side of the room and came back with some water, which she tossed over him. Her face was white and strained and eager, but it was the face of a woman who knew what she was doing and why she did it. Gilbert Rickerby staggered to his feet and laughed aloud for the pure joy of life and freedom.

He dashed at the bed and tore off sheets and blankets and hangings, beat out the flames that were beginning to lick them, and began to tear them up into long strips. Olive understood what he was doing, and began, frantically, with teeth and fingers, to knot the strips together. When a rope had been made long enough and strong enough, he twisted an end of it about her, caught up the rest over his arm and struggled towards the window. The floor was a living sheet of flame, and he knew that they had no chance of escape in that direction.

"Courage, dear heart," he whispered. "I'll let you down and slip down myself. You are not afraid?"

"Only for you," she whispered in reply, and stood, calm and firm, by his side.

He tore open the shutters and flung up the sash of the window. In the stillness of the night he heard the scream of a policeman's whistle and the sound of running feet; the flames behind them, fanned by the wind, roared up like a furnace. He gripped the girl by the waist and swung her up over the window ledge, steadied her for a moment, brushed her lips with his and let her go. From the garden below he heard a clear, quiet voice say that she was all right.

He twisted the end of the rope over the top of the shutter and knotted it firmly. The heat by this time as terrific, the flames were licking all around him. But he got over the window sill with a firm grip on the rope, and slipped down into the cool darkness of the garden. As he touched the earth he felt the girl close beside him, clinging to him and weeping hysterically.

But that was only for a moment. This cool, sane Olive, whom he had called back from darkness and delirium, was ready to do all that he asked, without question, and in utter trust of him. They gripped hands and ran across the garden; found the gate and pulled it open; and ran out into the street and sped away like happy children, hand in hand, with sobs and laughter.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Nugent Leathwood Pays in Full.

When Mr. Nugent Leathwood left Gilbert Rickerby tied up in that room of the deserted house, he may be said to have run down stairs with a very light heart. Less than an hour previously he had been placed in about the tightest corner a man well could occupy—with the gallows looming heavily before him and with but little chance of escape. But Mr. Leathwood had very adroitly turned the tables on his enemy, and was now enjoying freedom, while that enemy was tied up and doomed to death. Small wonder, then, that he tripped down gaily and felt that his prospects were brightening.

He entered the lower room and looked about him with the air of a man who has a delicate business on hand and plenty of time in which to complete it. The room, indeed, suited his purpose admirably; it was crowded with a conglomeration of furniture of all sorts, fallen into decay and covered with the dust of years. Old curtains and hangings which had been pulled down or had fallen down from their places in other rooms, had been tossed carelessly on to the furniture which had originally filled the room.

"It'll make a fine blaze," murmured Nugent to himself. "By Jove! this gets rid of Gilbert Rickerby with a vengeance! It hides him, too, that's the beauty of it. No more fears—no more hidings and dodgings; this mysterious Gilbert Rickerby will lie as safely under this heap of ashes as though he were buried in the deepest grave ever dug by man! Here's farewell to Rickerby's Folly! I'm sorry for you—house and man alike—but you've stood in my way, and must be swept out of it."

He struck a match and flung it carelessly, on to the first heap of curtains which lay before him. In a moment a little column of smoke went up, and then a little line of flame leaped along and ran swiftly from one point to another. Leathwood chuckled softly to himself, ran around the room, dropped a light here and there, and then retreated to the door. Quite a respectable blaze had started by the time he closed the door and began to make his way into the second house.

Now, he had given very careful instructions to Mr. Cornelius Veevers that that gentleman and the girl Olive were to be in waiting for him at the door, ready to depart instantly. Therefore, when he slipped through the passage which led from one house to the other, calling softly as he went, he was naturally very much astonished at receiving no reply. He ran up on the stairs and thrust open the door of Olive's room, never dreaming for a moment that the girl and Mrs. Reeks were crouched within, with the dead Cornelius at their feet. Hearing no sound, he ran on, higher still, impatiently calling to the old man, and still receiving no reply. At the top of the stairs he stopped, bewildered and a little frightened.

"I wonder if that old rascal has sold me?" he muttered to himself. "He's just the sort to turn tail at the last and make a bolt for it; he never liked being mixed up in that first affair, and it's quite possible he may funk this second one. But what on earth has he done with the girl?"

His one desire was to get away from the place, and leave the fire he had started to do its own work, but he did not mean to go without the girl. He had striven hard enough to gain her, and the way was now absolutely clear; he had put his hand to the business, and did not mean to be defeated at the last moment. He started down the house again, calling the girl sharply by name.

But it seemed to be a house of the dead—not a whisper in it anywhere. A strange feeling of dread crept over him; at the foot of the stairs he hesitated a moment, half-making up his mind to go away from the place alone, without troubling about Olive, but the thought came to him only for a moment; the next he set his teeth and swore that he would find her, whatever happened.

Coming to the very bottom of the house, and finding nothing, a sudden thought came to him—a thought which appeared to give a direct solution of the matter. He laughed aloud as it struck him.

"I never thought of that!" he whispered. "The little fool has gone to find her lover. She has been in the habit of going into that house; missing him here, she'd go, naturally enough, to look for him there. Well, my mad beauty, I'll have you out of that!"

He pulled open the door of the passage which led from one house to the other and darted along it. As he burst into the room into which it opened, he saw, at the farther side, the figure of a woman just opening the door which led to the staircase communicating with the upper rooms of the house. She carried a light in one hand; turning, and seeing him, she dropped it, and was instantly in darkness; he heard that farther door close behind her—heard hurried steps upon the stairs. He ran forward, crying to her, frantically: "Olive! Olive! For heaven's sake, come back, Olive!"

He stumbled across the room and was some little time in finding the door. But he found it at last and pulled it open, and went blundering up the stairs, still crying her name. Reaching the first floor, he glanced down the other staircase, which led to the room in which he had kindled the fire. The smoke floated up to him chokingly, and he could hear the fierce crackling of the burning wood. With his excitement and anxiety at fever heat, he dashed up the stairs, past the room in which he had left Gilbert, still crying the name of the girl. And, above him, he could hear the feet going on.

"She's mad, indeed!" he muttered, as he stumbled on. "I'll be lucky if I get her out before we're overtaken by the flames. I almost wish I'd left her alone. Curse this darkness! How the smoke comes rolling up!"

He stopped at last, bewildered, and struck a light; glancing up as he did so, he saw the flitter of a woman's dress just above him. Still crying that name, he started in pursuit once more begging the flying figure before him, with every word of endearment that occurred to him, to stop and listen to him.

He had reached the top of the house; fumbling blindly in the darkness, and hearing with terror the roar of the flames below, he plunged through an open doorway and found himself in a room; struck a light again, and saw the figure he sought at the farther end of it. Holding the tiny flame above his head, he advanced toward the figure, with one hand stretched out to touch it, and spoke, in a voice of entreaty:

"Olive, my sweet girl, don't run away from me like this! We are in danger. I have come to find you—to save you. You have nothing to fear; only come with me at once. Olive, do you hear me?"

The woman before him came slowly forward, keeping close against the wall. By the flickering ligth of the match he saw her coming along, shrinking from him, and with her face bent down, so that he could not see it. Then, as she got near him, she darted past and gained the door, slammed it quickly and set her back against it. Nugent, going nearer, with that tiny taper in his fingers, looked at the face of the woman—turned to him for the first time—and dropped the light, with a cry:

"Ursula!"

They were in complete darkness, and he could not see the woman's face, but he had seen it in that one instant, and he knew the voice when she spoke.

"Yes, Ursula," she said. "Not the girl you thought to find here, not the baby for whom you have cast me aside; but Ursula Sewell, the woman you called your wife a long time ago; the woman to whom you made promises that were never to be broken. Do you remember? I expect you do; at any rate, here in the darkness, you and I have a reckoning to make, an account to settle, for the last time in life."

He could not see her face, but he had a picture in his mind of the resolute figure standing before the door; he had another picture in his mind of the roaring furnace he had started down below them. Time was precious, and his very life depended upon what he said and what he did. Slowly, in the darkness, he crept nearer to her.

"Ursula, don't be a fool. You know perfectly well that I was not seeking the girl; that I—"

"Don't lie to me!" came her voice, fiercely, out of the darkness.

"I'm not lying; I swear I'm not," he pleaded, nervously. "I came—came in search of you; I wanted to warn you that the house was on fire, that here is not a moment to lose if you would escape. For Heaven's sake, be reasonable, and come away from that door!"

"No; it's too late for you and I to escape; you'd better think of yourself, and make your peace with whatever Power you believe in, while there is time. Don't come near me. You shall not pass this door while I have the power to cling to you and drag you from it. Stand back!"

The man knew only too well what raging fury he had to deal with in this wronged woman; knew that he would stand a greater chance for life against the flames than against her. It was horrible to stand there in the black darkness, hearing that steady roar below him and facing this resolute creature without the power to move her.

"Ursula—for the love of the old days—listen to me. I have been mad—desperately mad—ever to turn away from you; but I will atone. Don't carry this thing too far; you don't know the danger in which you stand—the danger that threatens us both. Listen to the roar of the fire!"

"Yes, I hear it," she replied, calmly. "There's plenty of time for us to discuss matters; it'll take a long while for the fire to reach us—and then the end will be swift."

"The end!" he gasped. "You, surely, don't mean—"

"Oh, yes, I do. Nugent Leathwood, if you had given me one word of tenderness—one word which showed me that the old things you whispered to me when I was an innocent girl had a spark of truth in them—I would have done anything to save you. Hush! do not speak now. It's too late to say what you might have said; you would only say it because the fear of death is on you. Think what you've lost, for the want of one word!"

In the darkness the man was creeping nearer to her, although she did not know it; his hands were stretched out to grapple with her when she least expected it. Yet all the while, he spoke as gently and as pleadingly as ever.

"So you won't give me the chance I asked for? Why, my dear girl, you, surely don't think that the mad feeling that I had for that child had anything permanent about it, do you? I wanted to see what stuff you were made of. I was coming back to you, Ursula, as surely as I stand here before you. Come—let us escape!"

"No, it's too late," she said again. "You are are lying to me, as you have always lied. You were seeking me, were you?—yet you ran like a madman up here, crying the name of that girl. That was seeking me, was it? Try another story, Nugent Leathwood, for that one won't serve."

"Then, perhaps this will serve," he cried, and darted straight at her. She caught him as they met, and held him, for a moment, at bay; then his superior strength bore down her arms and swung her away from the door. He tore it open and sprang out—only to dart back again, a moment later, with a roaring sea of flame behind him, lighting up the room and licking in at the door and along the boards of the floor. Even then, in the supreme moment of danger, he turned on the woman and cursed her for the thing he had done himself.

"See what you've done!" he cried, half-whimpering in terror. "No chance of getting down that way. I must try another."

He made a dash for the window; but she caught him around the arms and held him tightly; almost shouted in his ear; for the roar of the flames made it difficult for any words to be heard:

"You shan't go—I'll hold you to the last. You think you're going to escape again—you think you're going to find that girl. Shall I tell you where she is?"

"Let me go! I won't roast alive like this; let me go!" He struggled fiercely, twisting about in her strong grip; but the mere brute courage had gone out of the man, and she held him, easily. "Where is she?"

"Gone—with her lover—with Gilbert Rickerby!" she cried, with her lips close to his ear.

He twisted out of her grasp then and staggered back, staring at her with wild eyes. He saw in a moment that she spoke the truth; that this last, diabolical plan of his had come to naught—and that the very thing he had plotted so long to bring about had been frustrated, and that the lovers had escaped, while he was left to face the death he had prepared for Gilbert Rickerby.

"How do you know this?" he gasped. "He couldn't possibly have got away unless—"

"Yes, unless. You forgot to make your plans complete; the girl must have escaped and gone straight to him. I missed her; I meant to find her. I ran into this house, and as I went up the stairs, I saw the girl in front of me; I saw her go into the room on the first floor; I saw Gilbert Rickerby in the room waiting for her. Then I heard your voice below, calling to her, and I drew you up here and trapped you."

The news seemed to have put fresh energy into the man; he made for the window again, with an oath, and tore open the shutters and flung up the lower sash. A great roar—not of flames alone—from outside, met his appearance; he started back, and the light in the room fell upon his face. Above the roar of the voices down below, one, more shrill than the rest, floated up to him.

"That's the man!" cried the voice—no other than that of Mr. Hubbard. "There's a warrant out against 'im for murder—on my information. That's the man!"

Nugent Leathwood heard a confusion of voices below; saw the gleaming metal of helmets and engines; heard contradictory shouts from those who were nearest to the burning house. Baffled and bewildered, and scarcely knowing what he did, he turned and dated back again towards the door; was beaten back by the flames—and so stopped and faced Ursula Sewell, who stood still in the middle of the room, calmly and contemptuously looking at him.

"Now, see what you have done!" he cried, flinging out his hands in despair. "This is your love for me—that you will drag me to death like this. On the one side this accursed fire, that no man can break through alive; on the other side, a slower death by the gallows awaiting me. And but for you, I might have been miles away by this time."

"The fault is not mine," she said, slowly. "Look in my eyes, and tell me if you see fear in them. I have done no wrong, and there is an eager crowd outside ready and anxious to catch me if I sprang from that window. Yet I prefer to stay here to meet death, side by side with the man who will curse me with his last breath, perhaps drag me down to perdition with him. That's my love for you, Nugent Leathwood, a love you never understood, and never dreamed the value of a love stronger than death, outliving all neglect and ill-usage, and scorn and shame. What does it matter to me that death comes, and comes swiftly? I know no life without you, and never have known one."

To Prevent Railway Accidents.

An automatic railway accident preventer, invented by Rudolph Bartelmus, an electrician, has been tested by a body of railway managers with satisfactory results. The main idea is to put the engineer in direct communication with all the signal boxes by an electrical apparatus on the engine, contact being effected by a third rail. The signalman can thus make a red light burn on the locomotive in front of the engineer, while an electrical bell will ring until the engineer switches it off. On the other hand, the contrivance causes a bell to ring in the signal box as soon as the train is within 3,000 yards. Finally, if one train approaches another on the same rail within 3,000 yards, red lights turn automatically on the locomotives. The invention, it is believed, will go a long way towards rendering actions by collision impossible.—Berlin Correspondence of Chicago Chronicle.

Presents From Brides to Bridegrooms.

It is only comparatively recently that brides have begun to give wedding presents to their bridegrooms. Jeweled pins, sets of studs, links, a suit-case or dressing-bag, a dog cart, a saddle, a set of harness, and old engravings have been some of the gifts made in this way during the last few weeks. It used to be considered that the bride was doing her chosen one so much honor that all the onus of present-giving lay on his side. This, of course, was a polite fiction. A glimmer of the real state of the case seems to have broken in on the minds of the brides, and they now acknowledge some sense of obligation by presenting some article or articles of value to the man who rescues them from the reproach of spinsterhood, gives them an establishment, and some portion of (by no means all) his worldly goods.—London Truth.

More Than a Million in Prison.

Russian prison statistics, lately published, reveal some startling facts. Four years ago the number of prisoners in Russia was 764,373; now it has risen to 842,729. If the inmates of the military prisons, the peasants in houses of correction, and the prisoners in trans-Caspian jails were counted, it would be found that 1,000,000 of the subjects of the czar are incarcerated, not including the Siberian exiles, who number 77,160, nor the 3,323 convicts in the Saghalin prison.

The budget appropriates about $6 per prisoner per annum; the expenditure aggregating $7,500,000, of which sum $35.25 is squandered on books and papers for the million prisoners.—St. Petersburg Cable to New York World.

As a Peace Disturber.

"Cyril Trevannion!" exclaimed the high-spirited girl, "how dare you call upon me in such a plight. Have you been drinking?"

"Worse than that, Pulsatilla," replied the youth, who had knobs all over his face and a discoloration under one eye. "I've been fighting."

"Fighting! And have you the assurance to come to me and boast of it?"

"I have, Pulsatilla. I licked him."

"Whom, you disgraceful wretch?"

"The North Side slob that said we hadn't any good-looking girls down here in Hyde Park."

"Oh, Cyril!"

And she soothed him tenderly and put balm on his bruises.—Chicago Tribune.

How High Can a Balloon Rise?

The altitude that may be attained by a balloon depends, first, upon its size; secondly, upon the filling of gas, and, thirdly, upon the weight being carried. A balloon of ordinary size—43,000 cubic feet—carrying the smallest weight—that is—one person—when filled with illuminating gas, may reach 20,000 feet. In order to ascend higher, we need, first of all, a bigger balloon.

One may say it was a happy chance that the Royal Meteorological Institute of Berlin was provided with a balloon of the unusual dimensions of 300,000 cubic feet. The German emperor furnished £500 for making experiments with it, and the meteorological institute decided to make use of this opportunity for studying the highest regions of atmosphere.—Harper's Magazine.

An Absurdity.

"That's an absurd proposition," answered Mr. Meekton. "Henrietta would never be so careless with me as to let me go away on a sea voyage."—Washington Star.

FRESH WATER SHARK

FEROCITY OF THE MUSKALLONGE WELL ILLUSTRATED.

Its Jaws Capable of Crushing Metal or Severing a Man's Hand—Unbaited Hook Seized by a Giant Fish in Blind Rage—The Result.

They have on exhibition at Fifield, Wis., a No. 9 Skinner trolling spoon as an illustration of one of the many tricks of the muskallonge. It belonged to Byron L. Veatch of Chicago, a frequenter of the Flambeau waters in season.

It is of the usual heavy metal, gilded upon one side and silver on the other. It was hurt during the fishing season which closed in October.

This spoon was struck by a "musky" in the waters of Mason Lake, which is connected with the Flambeau, thence with the Chippewa and thence with the Mississippi. It was struck in anger. It was unbaited at the time and the fish knew that it was unbaited.

He nosed it once or twice as it was trolled past his lurking place at the roots of the lily-pads ten feet down. A guide was pulling the heavy boat and the fish was tired of being disturbed. He rushed it suddenly, seized the great spoon in his jaws, steering clear of the gang of hooks at its end, mashed it with one powerful grip, rolled over and disappeared.

The spoon looks as if it had been laid on an anvil and hammered by a blacksmith. It is crushed almost out of semblance to itself.

The metal at one side is rolled over and over as if some giant had tried to make an alloy cigarette. Its lower end is bent upon itself. It is in such shape that nothing could be done with it unless it were melted and remolded.

It is proof of the tremendous force in the jaws of this shark of the unsalted seas. Such a grip would have taken a man's hand off at the wrist. It would have severed one-half of his foot cleanly. The fish that did the trick weighed probably not more than thirty pounds.

In the village of Fifield are copper-bound oar blades which bear the marks of muskallonge teeth; a tin cup once snatched from a fisherman's hand as he leaned over the boat's side to dip water; a woman's breastpin of gold which was seized before it reached bottom and cut from its captured captor's belly.

The guides say that it is impossible to have much to do with a muskallonge's mouth even after it is dead, without suffering some laceration of the fingers. This is due to the numbers of rows of teeth and their exceeding sharpness.

Muskallonge are known often to strike a trolled spoon with closed jaws and send it flying fifteen feet in the air. Men who have seen the jaws of a twenty-pounder wide open do not wonder why they discover a four-pound bass faster and more neatly than a circular saw could do it.

MARITIME EXPRESSIONS.

Their Use in General Conversation Has Become Very Common.

Maritime expressions, used metaphorically, are, in fact, very common. We say a couple are "spliced," a young man is the "mainstay" of his family, an intruder "puts his oar in," the member from Wayback "steers through," a man is "hard up," sometimes "taken aback," or has "the wind taken out of his sails," a toper is "slewed," a loafer "spins a yarn," sometimes "tries the other tack," and a ruler "steers the ship of state" through troublesome times. This last metaphor is extremely ancient, by the way. Horace refers to Rome as a ship at sea, and Plutarch says the Delphic oracle referred to Athens in the same way. A Tamil saying embodies a like metaphor. "The soul is the ship, reason is the helm, the oars are the soul's thoughts, and truth is the port." An old collection of English proverbs contains this one: The tongue is the rudder of our ship." A Malay maxim says, "The boat which is swamped at sea may be bailed out, but the shipwreck of the affections is final." Aristophanes, Plautus and others use an expression which comes down to us as an English saw, "To row one way and look another." An old English proverb (1614) was, "It is not good to have an oar in everyone's boat."—United Service.

THE WOES OF LINEMEN.

No Picnic Putting Up Telegraph Service in South Africa.

A telegraph line is being built across South Africa and occasionally bits of information regarding the undertaking find their way to civilization. These reports show that the hardships suffered by linemen and the difficulties they are compelled to overcome are something tremendous. The line has now been carried up to the southern shore of Lake Tanganyika. During the last 200 miles the road was impassable for vehicles and all the supplies and material had to be transported by carriers. One section of the line passes through a swamp in which vegetation grows to such a height during the wet season as to top the wire and cause troublesome leakage. The natives can not be induced to go in during the season and cut down the weeds owing to the swarms of crocodiles. Of another section the elephants have caused several interruptions by breaking off the poles. In some of the forests through which the line passes trees are met measuring over 100 feet in circumference. Some of the ravines are impassable even to the linemen during the rainy season owing to the paths being under water and the rank growth of vegetation.

CHANGE OF LIFE.

Some Sensible Advice to Women by Mrs. E. Sailer.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—When I passed through what is known as 'change of life,' I had two years' suffering,—sudden heat, and as quick chills would pass over me; my appetite was variable and I never could tell for a day at a time how I would feel the next day. Five bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound changed all that, my days became days of health, and I have enjoyed every day since—now six years.

"We have used considerable of your Vegetable Compound in our charitable work, as we find that to restore a poor mother to health so she can support herself and those dependent upon her, if such there be, is truer charity than to give o... or aid. You have my hearty endorsement, for you have proven yourself a true friend to suffering women."—MRS. E. SAILER, 756½ Hill St., Los Angeles, Cal.—$5000 forfeit if above testimonial is not genuine.

Nurses' Experience.

Medical men say that a good nurse in a difficult case is better than medicine, but when we can get a good nurse and good medicine, the patient stands a much better chance of recovery. The few words of advice given below by nurse Eliza King, are well worthy the attention of all readers:

"I have constantly used St. Jacobs Oil in the various situations I have occupied as nurse, and have invariably found it excellent in all cases requiring outward application, such as sprains, bruises, rheumatic affections, neuralgia, etc. In cases of pleurisy it is an excellent remedy—well rubbed in. I can strongly recommend it after several years' use and experience. It should be in every household."

Sister CAROLINA, St. Andrew's Hospital, writes: "I have found St. Jacobs Oil a most efficacious remedy in gout; also in sprains and bruises. Indeed, we cannot say too much in its praise, and our doctor is ordering it constantly."

WANTED TO GO UP TOWN.

Story Told by Lew Dockstader of an Absent-Minded Man—He Was Not Hurt.

"Speaking of absent-minded men," said Lew Dockstader, "one day last week I saw the worst case that has ever come under my notice. A middle-aged man ran up the down-town side of the Thirty-third street station on Sixth avenue and thrust a $1 bill through the window. 'There was a train in the station at the time, and the man rushed past the ticket-chopper, carefully dropping his 95 cents in the box. Waving his ticket in the air, he made a dash for the train. As he put his foot on the platform of the car the gate was shut in his face, knocking him sprawling upon his back as the train rolled away. The ticket-chopper and several others on the platform rushed to his assistance and helped him to his feet.

"'Never mind, sir,' said the chopper; 'here comes another train,' after being assured that the anxious passenger was not injured.

"'Oh, it don't make much difference after all,' answered the middle-aged party; 'I wanted to go up town, anyhow.'

"Now, if that isn't the limit," said Mr. Dockstader, "I want to know what is."—New York Times.

"They helped me right along, and I kept on using them till I had used four boxes, when the pain left me altogether. One box of Dodd's Kidney Pills has done me more good than five dollars' worth of doctor's medicine.

"This remedy has certainly worked wonders in my case, and I feel it my duty to give it the credit due."

Expert Not Worried Over Mere Trifles

Agony of Bank Officials a Small Thing in His Eyes

If there is any man in the world that could transform himself into an efficient burglar it is the expert on combinations up in the office of the safe trust. This man knows more about locks and vaults than all the bank robbers in the country. He can open a safe in Boston by telephone in five minutes, ordinarily. If a bank in Philadelphia loses its combination there is a tumultuous ringing of 'phone bells in the trust's office, and the boy at the switchboard shouts wildly for the expert.

"Well, what is it?" the opener of vaults shouts into the mouthpiece, his tone showing that he is accustomed to such calls.

"This is the —— bank. The president's gone home and the cashier's sick. I'm Mr. ——. Give me the figures, please."

The opener satisfies himself that the right man is on the other end. Then he looks up his records, if he does not happen to remember the figures wanted. It is only a matter of a few minutes before he is back at the 'phone, and in as many more minutes the vault in Philadelphia is opened.

It happened the other day that a Boston trust company was in trouble about its combination. The safe concern was called up, and the lock expert was summoned to the receiver. The usual request followed, but by some chance the opener's good memory had forsaken him, and he had no record of the particular lock in question. The Boston officials swore loudly over the wire. It was no use, though, and finally they had to give it up.

Not long after the wire had been vacated there was another ring, and the opener found himself again in conversation with the same people. This time it was a request that he come to Boston at once, hiring a special train if necessary.

"I can't come," he answered. "There's too much to do here in office hours. I'll take the regular train Sunday."

Argument was of no avail, and the Boston bankers had to wait. The combination was lost on Wednesday, and for the next four days they had to borrow all the cash they needed from other companies. The inconveniences they endured by reason of inaccessible papers may be imagined.

This did not worry the expert, however, for he knew that nobody else could fill his place as well as he, and so there was no danger of his being discharged. He had been with the safe concern for a great many years, and his imperturbability was not to be upset by a trust company's temporary troubles. He left the office at the usual time every day, had his dinner at home, and slept just as easily during those four days as though there were no such things as bank safes. In speaking of the occurrence he said:

"Why didn't I go? The idea! Do you know there are six or eight banks that lose their figures every day? It was better to leave one of them in a lurch for four days than to have them all in trouble for one day."

Urgency alone makes eloquence in prayer.

A Surprised American

New Yorker's Fine Opportunity to Form Estimate of Kaiser Wilhelm.

One summer day in 1890 a New Yorker visiting Berlin strolled to the Lustgarten, and, sitting on one of the benches, contemplated the fine buildings around him. He did not know his bearings very well, and, in halting German, asked some questions of a young man who had sat down beside him.

This young man was unmistakably a German, but he replied in perfect English, remarking that he presumed his interlocutor was either an Englishman or an American. The couple chatted for half an hour, and the American became more and more astonished at the minuteness of the other's knowledge of the archaeology of Berlin. He knew the history of every building in sight, told the American just those things that the guide books do not tell, and, withal, was so courteous and unaffectedly cordial that the heart of the tourist warmed to his unknown guide.

At length the conversation drifted from the past to the present, and the New Yorker made a remark about the opinion held in America of the Kaiser. In those days the young "War Lord" was regarded as a dangerous firebrand—as an irresponsible monarch who might any day plunge Europe into conflict. It was even said that he had shown evidence of insanity.

When this subject arose the young German suddenly changed from a giver of information to a seeker of it, asking eagerly for details of the reports about the Kaiser current in America. These the New Yorker furnished to the best of his ability, and ended by asking:

"What do you personally think of him?"

"I am afraid," replied the young man, "that my opinion on that subject is not of much value. I am the Kaiser himself."

The American sprang to his feet in amazement. The Emperor cut his apologies short.

"My friend," said he, "you have done me a service. It is hard for me to learn the truth about what is said of me—just as hard as it is for people far away to learn the truth about me. But, with God's help, I will show them what is said about me is wrong."

"And no one," says the American in telling the story nowadays, "need say anything about the Kaiser to me. I know a man when I see one."

It has taken the world many years to find out how wrong was its estimate of the ruler of the German nation, but it has been found out by now, or, at any rate, those whose opinion is worth anything have done so.

Twelve years ago people talked of "the mad emperor."

Nowadays he is referred to as "the cleverest man in Europe."

The latter view according to those who know him best is far from being an exaggeration.—New York Times.

PALMISTRY AND SCIENCE

Proof That Readings of the Human Hand Have a Logical Basis.

It appears that palmistry, stripped of the nonsense and occultism in which it has been befogged by itinerant gypsies and fortune-tellers, has a scientific basis. Dr. William G. Benham, who has made a life study of the human hand from a purely scientific point of view, gives the results of his investigations in a volume just issued by G. P. Putnam's Sons, called "The Laws of Scientific Hand Reading." The volume is a sort of modern text book and guide to the real truths which the human hand contains.

Dr. Benham declares that there is so much information in the hand it will be a surprise to many, and even when it is seen how logical, rational and even commonplace hand-reading is, perhaps it will then be taken out of the occult class, to which it distinctly does not belong, and placed among the other rational means at the service of mankind whereby they may be enabled to gain a better knowledge of themselves.

"In the preparation of this book," he says, "my ambition has been so to present this matter to the public that they would see it from a novel point of view, and by disclosing the logical basis on which it rests, presented without a vestige of mysticism or occult halo, lift it from its position as an effete superstition and place it among the modern sciences. My ambition has been to make palmistry not an amusement nor a center around which cranks might congregate, but a study worthy of the best efforts of the best minds. When we can tell our sons and daughters what sphere in life they are best fitted to occupy and what studies they can best master we shall have largely reduced the failures of young men and women. We can prevent the marriage of people whose temperaments make it absolutely impossible that they should live together harmoniously, then we shall have largely decreased the number of divorces and wrecked lives."

Much Safer.

In the card room of a certain club one of the frequenters had long been the subject of suspicion. Indeed more than one member had expressed the opinion that he was a rogue.

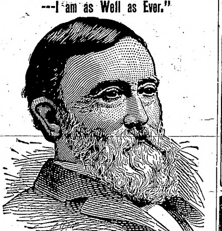
One evening the suspected one was caught red-handed and exposed before the whole company. Whereupon the indignant members rose in a body and kicked the cheat from the top of the stairs to the bottom.

He hobbled away to the residence of an influential member of the club and complained of the treatment he had received. "What would you do in my place?" he asked, in conclusion.

"Well, I should certainly play on the ground floor in the future. It would be safer, at all events."—Stray Stories.

Accused of Murdering Boy.

Henry and Nancy Cross, a married couple, are in jail at Washington Court House, Ohio, charged with killing Ralph Thompson, aged 10, a lad whom they took from the Fayette County Children's Home five weeks ago. The coroner's post-mortem examination revealed the awful cause of the child's death. His toes were frozen off so that the bones protruded, his back was roasted and parts of his body burned off. Scarcely a square inch of the child's body was free from scars and bruises, and a ring round his neck indicated he had been hanged. Cross is said to be a demon. It is alleged that he hangs up his wife by the thumbs and beats her, and that he once picked out a horse's eyes with a stick.



DAN GROSVENOR SAYS:

"Pe-ru-na is an Excellent Spring Catarrh Remedy—I am as Well as Ever."

HON. DAN. A. GROSVENOR, OF THE FAMOUS OHIO FAMILY.

Hon. Dan. A. Grosvenor, Deputy Auditor for the War Department, in a letter written from Washington, D. C., says:

"Allow me to express my gratitude to you for the benefit derived from one bottle of Peruna. One week has brought wonderful changes and I am now as well as ever. Besides being one of the very best spring tonics it is an excellent catarrh remedy."—
DAN. A. GROSVENOR

In a recent letter he says:

"I consider Peruna really more meritorious than I did when I wrote you last. I receive numerous letters from acquaintances all over the country asking me if my certificate is genuine. I invariably answer, yes."—Dan. A. Grosvenor.

A Congressman's Letter.

Hon. H. W. Ogden, Congressman from Louisiana, in a letter written at Washington, D. C., says the following of Peruna, the national catarrh remedy:

"I can conscientiously recommend your Peruna as a fine tonic and all around good medicine to those who are in need of a catarrh remedy. It has been commended to me by people who have used it, as a remedy particularly effective in the cure of catarrh. For those who need a good catarrh medicine I know of nothing better."—H. W. Ogden.

Treat Catarrh in Spring.

The spring is the time to treat catarrh. Cold, wet winter weather often retards a cure of catarrh. If a course of Peruna is taken during the early spring months the cure will be prompt and permanent. There can be no failures if Peruna is taken intelligently during the favorable weather of spring.

As a systemic catarrh remedy Peruna eradicates catarrh from the system wherever it may be located. It cures catarrh of the stomach or bowels with the same certainty as catarrh of the head.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Big Industries Built up on Small Articles.

Few people realize the wants and requirements of the eighty millions of people in the United States. Who would think that it requires over a million dollars capital to carry on the package dye business in this country, and that there are twelve different factories in the United States that manufacture package dye?

One of the largest package dye factories in the world is that of the Putnam Fadeless Dye Co., Unionville, Mo. In this factory alone over three million packages are put up every year. When you know that each package colors from 3 to 6 pounds of goods, or that the output of Putnam Fadeless Dyes alone will color from 9 to 18 million pounds and that it would require more than 500 cars to haul this amount of dyed goods, you will realize the magnitude of this seemingly small business.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

The Minneapolis Journal, in discussing the political situation in this senatorial district, suggests that Hon. O. G. Rapp, of St. Hilaire, be rewarded for the services he has rendered the people in the house of representatives, and be given the nomination for state senator. The Republicans of this legislative district surely have reason to be proud of the record Mr. Rapp has made. His vote was recorded in the interests of the people every time, and never for the corporations. If there were more men of Mr. Rapp's stamp in the legislature, it would be better for the state, and he certainly should be returned by the people.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of three hundred and ninety (390) dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by August Mardell and Caroline Mardell, his wife, mortgagors to the Security Building Loan Association of the city of Minneapolis, mortgagees, bearing date the twelfth (12) day of June, 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the twenty-eighth day of June, 1890, at eight o'clock a. m., in book fifty-three of mortgages, on pages 425-433, which said records have since been transferred to Red Lake County, Minnesota.

It is thought that action will be taken in about a month.

IT'S SAWING NOW.

Mill Started Up for the Season Yesterday.

The Thief River Falls Lumber company's large saw mill in this city started up for the season yesterday and will run both night and day from now until it freezes up next fall. There is a sufficient number of logs in the booms to last until the ice goes out of the lake and the logs cut this winter are driven to this city.

The mill is manned by about the same crew as was employed last season.

Joe Gierock, a man well known in this city, who has a claim northeast of here and who has been employed by the Thief River Falls Lumber company as cook in the woods during the winter, was arrested in Crookston upon the complaint of Conductor Hank Murray for the alleged offence of using vulgar and obscene language in the presence of ladies. He paid a fine of $5.

The statement made in the NEWS last week to the effect that the $300 secured for the county road west of this city was the first money ever received from the road and bridge fund in the northern part of the county was an error. K. M. Hansen states that when he was commissioner he secured an appropriation of $100 for the town of Sanders; $100 for the town of North, and $215 for the bridge across the Red lake river in the city.

Mrs. James O'Brien arrived in the city last Thursday from Stillwater, and is visiting her sister, Mrs. S. F. Staples. She was called home Monday by the sudden death of her sixteen year old stepson, Dwight, who died of heart disease.

Mr. and Mrs. James Meehan left yesterday for Hot Spring, Ark to remain a month in the hopes of benefitting Mr. Meehan's health. They took their son, Llwellyn, to St. Paul where he will be placed in St. Thomas school to remain during their absence.

The case of Nels Peterson vs. Ole Arneson to collect a commission for the sale of the latter's farm was tried before Judge Tarrant at the regular term of the municipal court which convened Tuesday. The case was thrown out of court by Judge Tarrant who did not think there were facts sufficient to constitute an action.

If you want to file on a piece of government land it will not be necessary to go to Crookston Make your filing in Thief River Falls before L. G. Browning, U. S. commissioner for the district of Minnesota.

BIG GAIN

Postoffice Receipts Show Show We Are Growing.

Postmaster Richardson has figured up the totals receips for the postoffice here for the government fiscal year ending on March 31st 1902, and finds that the total receips for the office during that period are just 26 per cent greater than they were last year. This is a very flattering showing, and indicate that Thief River Falls is advancing at a rapid rate.

Nat Campbell and others of Crookston have made application to the secretary of the interior. The for an island in Mud lake land is claimed by right of discovery.

The annual picnic of the members of the Modern Woodmen of Red Lake county will be held at St. Hilaire next summer. Ira C. Richardson, of this city, is chairman of the picnic committee.

Gus Bostrom, who had a contract for piling lumber for a Cass Lake saw mill, returned to this city the first of the week. The mill by which he was employed burned down, and he will now remain here and work for the local company.

HERE'S A SUGGESTION.

When you want a first-class daily newspaper.—

One that excels in Northwest news;

One that spares no pains to get the news of the world, and prints it first.

One whose commercial and financial news and market reports are admitted to be the best;

One that is fearless and fair in its editorial discussion of live topics—republican but independent;

One that contains Bart's cartoons the Journal Junior a weekly paper for children without extra cost—Jermane's daily Washington correspondence, and many other notable features peculiar to that paper.

There is only one thing for you to do and that is to subscribe for the MINNEAPOLIS JOURNAL.

The Journal for three month and a splendid map of the state of Minnesota and the world for $1.00.

MOSQUITO PEST CURE.

Consul at Maracaibo Says the Castor Plant Will Drive Them Away.

Consul Plumacher, at Maracaibo, has written to the state department at Washington giving a remedy against mosquitoes. He says:

"It consists in planting the castor oil plant (Ricinus communis, or Palma Christi) around the house and premises. In cold and temperate climates the castor oil plant grows to a height of four or five feet. In these countries it becomes a tall tree and is perennial. It seems that the smell of the plant is disagreeable to mosquitoes and other insects, and it is an acknowledged fact that where these plants grow few mosquitoes are found. My personal experience bears this out.

"My residence is surrounded by plantain and banana trees, and I have been much troubled in the past by the great number of mosquitoes which gathered between the leaves. Following the example of old settlers in the country, I planted the castor seeds, which grew up in profusion, and there are now no mosquitoes to be found among the plantain and banana trees, although I keep the ground well irrigated. By keeping branches and the seeds of the plant in rooms the mosquitoes are driven away from the latter."

Gun Barrels.

To brown gun barrels, wet a piece of rag with chloride of antimony, dip it into olive oil and rub the barrel over. In 46 hours it will be covered with a fine coat of rust. Then rub the barrel with a fine steel scratch brush and wipe with a rag dipped in boiled linseed oil. To rebrown, remove the old coating with oil and emery paper; then remove the grease with caustic potash.

LAW LETS HIM GO

SELF-CONFESSED CRIMINAL CANNOT BE PUNISHED FOR CRIME.

THE TIME LIMIT HAD EXPIRED

SURRENDERS AFTER BEING FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE FOR TEN YEARS.

HOUNDED BY LAW FOR YEARS

HAD BEEN ENGAGED IN THE MANUFACTURE OF SPURIOUS COIN.

Chicago, March 29. — For ten years Peter Cinculis has been a fugitive from justice, hounded by the law as a counterfeiter, tracked from city to city and from country to country as an escaped jail bird.

Yesterday he surrendered himself to the law a confessed felon — and the prison refused to open and receive him. The time for punishing him had expired and by the same law which sought to rob him of his freedom he received his liberty.

Such is the story of Peter Cinculis, a middle aged man, a Lithuanian, who walked out of the insane court at the detention hospital shortly before noon yesterday, where he had at last turned up after having traveled all over the world in an effort to avoid arrest.

Ten years ago, according to a strange story which he told the jury in the tribunal for the insane, he had been arrested in Pittsburg by federal secret service officers on a charge of counterfeiting United States money. He was lodged in jail in the Pennsylvania city. He and his two companions with whom he had been engaged in the manufacture of spurious coin which had brought about their imprisonment,

Plotted to Escape.

Cinculis alone succeeded. He had squeezed himself through the prison window past the bars which had been sawed after many days' of secret work and planning, when the plot was discovered before the other two could follow him. Their indictment on the counterfeiting charge followed — and both are in the Pennsylvania penitentiary, serving long sentences. After his delivery from the jail Cinculis fled to Canada, and traveled all over the world. He returned to the United States.

He recently reached Chicago and a few days ago told a policeman that he was a counterfeiter. The policeman arrested him, thinking that he was insane. Cinculis' story was investigated and found to be true. It was found, however, that he had not been indicted and that the time limit for securing an indictment had lapsed.

The jury returned a verdict declaring Cinculis to be of sound mind and he was released from custody. He says that he has led an honest life for ten years.

INJURIES PROVE FATAL.

Foreman of Copper Mine Dies From Burns Received While Fighting Fire.

Marquette, Mich., March 29.—Michael English, foreman of the American Bridge company's crew which is erecting the steel shaft and rock houses at the Adventure copper mine, Houghton, is dead as the result of terrible burns sustained while quenching a fire which, had it spread, would have destroyed the village of Greenland. English had gone to bed in his room at a local hotel, leaving an oil stove burning. He was awakened a couple of hours later to find the room ablaze, and in his night clothes he fought flames until he had put them out.

GASTER DISAPPEARS.

Alleged to Be a Fugitive From Justice.

Kenosha, Wis., March 29.—Ald. John Gaster of this city, who is charged with accepting a bribe in connection with the passage of a street railway ordinance, is now a fugitive from justice. In the circuit court yesterday afternoon Judge Belden declared the bond of Gaster forfeited and issued a bench warrant for his arrest. It is claimed Gaster disappeared Wednesday night. Up to 9 o'clock last night deputies could find no trace of him. The amount of his bond was $1,000.

FATHER AND SON BURGLARS.

Four Eau Claire People Implicated by Witnesses.

Eau Claire, Wis., March 29.—Joseph Theming was convicted in the circuit court yesterday of burglarizing buildings on a farm in the town of Ludington. Theming's son, who was a witness in the case, is in the Green Bay reformatory for the same offense, in which John Chaney, now awaiting sentence, and Chaney's wife, now in jail, were also concerned.

High Water in the Red.

Wahpeton, N. D., March 29. — The Red river has risen rapidly during the past twenty-four hours, and it is thought that dwellers along the flats near the river bed will need to move out. No fear is entertained, however, that the farmers will be inconvenienced in the south end of the valley at least, as a flood has never been known in this vicinity. The danger arises from an accumulation of water along the river course further north, where the melted ice of the south end overflows the ice of the north end.

Robbed Their Mother.

Beatrice, Neb., March 29.—William and Frank Skrable were arrested and brought to this city yesterday, charged with robbing their mother of $2,700. Frank has confessed that he and his brother took the money.

DEAD IN THE ENGINE CAB.

Terrible End of a St. Paul Locomotive Fireman, Employed on Burlington.

St. Paul, March 30.—When the Burlington train from Chicago rolled into the Union depot yesterday morning Frederick Grey, the engineer jumped from his lofty seat and noticed for the first time that his fireman. Fred Busacker, was lying motionless on the floor of the cab. Busacker was dead. The top of his head was crushed in, and he had evidently been instantly killed by some bridge or girder while looking out of the window. The engine was one of the large type, and the boiler projecting back into the cab prevented the engineer from seeing the accident. Busacker was twenty-four years old and a single man. His home was on Euclid street, St. Paul.

LIFE PRISONERS ON PAROLE.

They Are Civilly Dead and Cannot Marry Under the Law.

St. Paul, March 30. — Gov. Van Sant has received from Attorney General Douglas an opinion that life prisoners on parole cannot marry or enter into any civil contract. A prisoner on parole is still a ward of the state serving his sentence, and, under the law, he is civilly dead. His capacity for entering into contracts is not restored until he has been granted a full pardon or served out the term of his sentence, and, of course, the term of life imprisonment does not end until terminated by death or pardon. While no names are mentioned, it is understood that the opinion refers to the Younger brothers, as Jim asked the governor for an opinion as to whether he could marry while on parole. It is understood that he wished to marry Alix J. Mueller, who formerly ran a newspaper at Spring Valley, another at Hector, and later was engaged in newspaper work in Montana. Miss Mueller was much interested in securing a pardon for the Younger brothers before their release on parole.

If there is a large quantity of the rock, and it is thought to be there in abundant quantities, Mr. Burris will have property of high value.

NOT DANISH AGENT

NEITHER CHRISTMAS NOR GRON WERE RECOGNIZED BY DENMARK.

NOTHING TO DO WITH THE DEAL

STATE DEPARTMENT SAYS DENMARK WILL NOT PAY THE MONEY.

ABNER M'KINLEY NOT IN IT

HIS PARTNER ENTERS A VIGOROUS DENIAL OF THE CHARGES.

Copenhagen, March 30.—The Christmas scandal is not discussed here, nor are the facts of the case published in Copenhagen, although a full account of Congressman Richardson's statements in congress was telegraphed to the semi-official news agency in this city.

Denmark, however, has heard from both Capt. Walter Christmas and Niels Gron, who also has claimed to have acted as a Danish agent in negotiating the sale of the Danish West Indies. Each claimed a commission, but the government has refused to recognize either of them, declaring that neither was ever connected with the negotiations in the slightest degree.

No Money for Bribery.

Washington, March 30.—The state department will take no steps to bring to the attention of the Danish government the charges against the integrity of American statesmen said to have been preferred by Capt. Christmas and Thursday brought to the attention of the house of representatives. The department regards the charges as unworthy of its attention by reason of insufficient evidence and obvious error in statements of alleged facts. The department is perfectly aware, also, that the Danish government does not intend to pay one cent of the $500,000 claimed by Christmas as his compensation or commission, so that, of course, none of the money could be used to corrupt American statesmen and newspapers.

Vigorous Denial.

New York, March 30. — Wilbur C. Brown, partner of Abner McKinley, whose name was mentioned in connection with the Christmas charges made public in congress yesterday, has sent the following letter to Representative Dalzell, chairman of the investigating committee:

"The papers this morning contain extracts read in congress yesterday from invidious charges alleged by one Walter Christmas in connection with the purchase of the Danish West Indies. So far as these charges relate to Abner McKinley and myself they are unqualifiedly maliciously false in every particular. I shall be glad to appear before your committee at any time you may desire."

KENTUCK LADY'S ASPIRATION.

Louisville, March 30. — Miss Mary Burkhart of Lane, Wolf county, is a candidate for congress in the Tenth district. She has announced her candidacy on the Prohibition ticket. Miss Burkhart is the daughter of a wealthy lumberman, is good looking, quick witted and learned in politics. She has started out to make a house to house canvass of the district, which is full of mountains, over which mules are about the only animals that can travel. She will use a mule and walk. She says there is no law that can keep her from being seated in congress if she gets a majority of the votes, and she will surely take her seat, she says.

A GRUESOME FIND.

Skeleton of a Woman Found in a Pirates' Den.

Buena Vista, Ohio, March 30.—While tearing down an old house a few miles north of here yesterday John Downing, a laborer, found the skeleton of a woman beneath the floor. The lower jaw bone was broken, indicating that the woman had met a violent death. There is no clue to the mystery. The house was formerly a rendezvous for river pirates. About ten years ago a young school teacher who came here from the East mysteriously disappeared and nothing was ever heard of her. It is now believed she may have been assaulted and killed and her body secreted under the floor of the house.

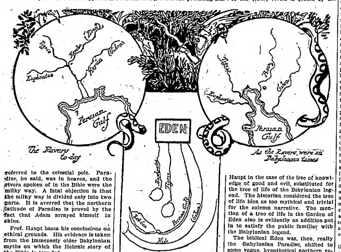
Scientist Has Located the Garden of Eden



The Rivers to-day

Hebrew Conception of Paradise and Rivers

As the Rivers were in Babylonian times

The latest scientific decision concerning the location of Paradise, the "Garden of Eden," was announced by Prof. Paul Haupt, head of the department of Semitic languages at Johns Hopkins university, in a lecture delivered in the Haskell Hall of Chicago university.

Eden, says the professor, was situated close to the confluence of the Euphrates and Tigris in northern Mesopotamia. This view is the ancient one of the biblical scholar, which later scientists have rejected. The evidence adduced by Prof. Haupt is culled from cuneiform inscriptions deciphered and translated within the last year, the principal translations having been made by Prof. Edward Harper of Chicago. Among the locations assigned (principally by German scholars) for Eden have been Palestine, Sweden, India, Australia, and the north pole. In the latter case, the German scientist who is responsible for the hypothesis referred to the celestial pole. Paradise, he said, was in heaven, and the rivers spoken of in the Bible were the milky way. A fatal objection is that the milky way is divided only into two parts. It is averred that the northern latitude of Paradise is proved by the fact that Adam arrayed himself in skins.

Prof. Haupt bases his conclusions on ethical grounds. His evidence is taken from the immensely older Babylonian myths on which the Hebraic story of the Bible is founded.

According to the Bible, a river had its source in Paradise, which latter divided itself into four streams named Gihon, Pison, Hiddekel (Tigris) and Euphrates.

The Tigris and the Euphrates are easily identified. These two, however, have not a common source but a common mouth. As for a common source for four streams, there is nothing in the region which could possibly be interpreted as such.

But the ancient Babylonian legends constantly make mention of a Paradise, a region of the blessed. They put it, however, not at the source, but at the mouth of four rivers.

The most famous of the Babylonian cyclic poems is that of Nimrod—the name was later borrowed by Hebrew writers. Nimrod, in his search for the tree of life, passed through a land where there was abundance of spices and pearls—evidently southern Arabia. Thence he sailed for six weeks, and finally arrived at the Land of the Blessed, the description of which corresponds closely with that of Eden. Later came the mythical stories of Alexander, who went in search of the spring of life, but, though he discovered it, he did not recognize it nor partake of it. The details of the two legends point to a common source. Now, the Pison River of Paradise is spoken of in the Bible as flowing through a land producing spices and "onyx." Modern Hebrew scholars say that the word "onyx" should be pearl, and that the territory referred to is southern Arabia. The Babylonian notion, then, was that Paradise was at the mouth of four rivers, one of which, in its upper portion, flowed through south Arabia. The Biblical version, interpreted in the same way, would be that Paradise was at the source of four rivers, which, in their lower parts, flowed through south Arabia.

Now it is to be remembered that the ancients were weak in geography. Alexander thought that the Indus was the upper portion of the Nile. The opinion of early geographers was that India and Ethiopia were connected by land. The Persian Gulf they supposed to be a river, part of which was called the Red Sea. Between these and the sea surrounding the earth—the "potamos" of Homer—was land. Alexander found out his mistake, but it is quite natural that generations preceding him by several hundred years should have been somewhat hazy on such geographical niceties.

It is true that there is no place in the region where four rivers flow into the sea at present. Geology, however, shows that the Persian Gulf once extended considerably further inland than to-day. The north shore of the Persian Gulf, then, some thousands of years ago, would have been above the confluence of the Euphrates and Tigris. Those rivers in those days would have had separate mouths. Thus two of the four rivers are to be accounted for; and it may be remarked that in some of the Babylonian myths only two rivers are mentioned. However, two other rivers can be found—namely, the Kercha and the Karun—to correspond with the Pison and Gihon of Genesis. To-day these are tributaries of the united Euphrates and Tigris. With the early position of the Persian Gulf they would pour through separate channels into the gulf. Here, then, we have the four rivers flowing into the sea at a spot a few hundred miles north of the present north shore of the Persian Gulf, and here, plainly, was the Babylonian Paradise.

The Hebrew always conceived God as dwelling in the North. The mouth of the two rivers is south of Palestine, hence as a concession to popular belief the scriptural narrator used "source" for "mouth," so moving Paradise somewhere north of Mesopotamia.

But what of the further progress of these rivers through lands of onyx (pearl) and spices? As has been stated the Red Sea and Persian Gulf were taken to be part of one river. According to Prof. Haupt this was the continuation of the Pison, which had its mouth it did not matter where, Mediterranean, Black Sea, some fabulous part. In the same manner the Gihon was held to be the upper waters of the Nile, flowing through the imagined Asian-African southern continent into the Mediterranean via southern Arabia, Ethiopia and Egypt. As a precedent to such a concession on the part of the Hebrew historian as moving Paradise from the mouth to the source of the (four) rivers is quoted by Dr. Haupt in the case of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, substituted for the tree of life of the Babylonian legend. The historian considered the tree of life idea as too mythical and trivial for the solemn narrative. The mention of a tree of life in the Garden of Eden also is evidently an addition put in to satisfy the public familiar with the Babylonian legend.

The biblical Eden was, then, really the Babylonian Paradise, shifted to some vague, hypothetical northern region from the old embouchures of the Euphrates and Tigris in the Persian Gulf; and it is here that archaeologists must seek their relics.

After the Savings.

"They try all kinds of dodges on you in a boarding house," said the man who had had fifteen years' experience, "and it is seldom you can find a landlady who hasn't a card up her sleeve. My present one has good rooms and a good table, but at the beginning of winter she began turning the gas off in the daytime. I happened to want to use it one day to heat my shaving water, and a little later I spoke to her about it.

"'Mrs. Tompkins,' I said, 'I see you have the gas turned off in the daytime?'

"'Yes, sir,' she replied.

"'I have been figuring it out, and do you know how much you save per month by the move?'

"'I can't say.'

"'You save just one cent a month.'

"'Do I? Well, then, I shall surely turn it off every day for the next year and save a whole shilling.'"

When it is a question of advice, nobody will play the game of follow the leader.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Producing a Corn Crop.

From The Farmers' Review: The thing most necessary is the plowing of the land, as I think the cultivation of the corn crop begins with the proper plowing of the land. On my farm we plow all land intended for corn in the fall of the year and we plow an average depth of six inches. We use for this work the tricycle or three-wheel plow, cutting a sixteen-inch furrow. The principal reason for plowing deep is to form a good mulch over the land that we may be able to retain the moisture late in the season and prevent evaporation. In the spring when the proper time arrives, we prepare a good seed bed and plant our corn, and then, in a few days, we put the spike harrow on and harrow thoroughly, sometimes going both ways of the field, as we find for the first cultivation this to be not only very rapid but very thorough. One man and four horses will cultivate forty acres in a day. Now you of course understand the season has much to do with the method of cultivation. Now, as to the kind of cultivator, we have used most all kinds of corn cultivators and experimented quite a little along this line, and we have arrived at this conclusion: After the harrowing we use the six-shovel sulky cultivator for the first and second working. I mean by the second working the cross plowing (and I want to say right here that we plow corn only three times, believing more is rather an injury than a benefit), and now for the third or last plowing. We throw aside the shovels entirely and use the surface cultivator. We give as our reason for making this change that with this implement we can keep out of the roots of the corn, which is absolutely necessary in this last cultivation, besides leaving the surface of the field almost level, and forming a dust mulch all over the land, which tends to check evaporation and hold the moisture among the roots of the corn. Some of my brother farmers may say we can't afford so many kinds of plows and to this I would say we have the combined shovel and surface plow, this surface attachment costing about $6 extra.

Now as to the second question as to the failure of the corn crop in this section, would say I am situated in the corn belt of Illinois and we never have any failures. We sometimes have a short corn crop, like the present one. The short crop of this year we attribute to dry weather and hot winds, more, I think, on account of the hot winds than dry weather. I have been on the farm fifty years and I never saw such a visitation of hot winds before. This came just as the tassel was making its appearance, young and so tender from its folds that in many instances it was killed, having, of course, no power to pollenize, hence so many barren stalks, and I think these causes are consequently unavoidable.—W. S. Harrold.

Tree Planting.

One of the most important and promising lines of work of the Bureau of Forestry is its study of economic tree planting and its co-operation with farmers and others in making forest plantations. Tree planting has so vital and intimate a relation to the welfare of the farmer in the treeless regions that whatever assists him to grow trees assists him also in the production of every other crop. Forty-six thousand one hundred and forty-five acres were examined for planting during the year, and planting plans were prepared for 5,785 acres, while 148 applications for tree-planting plans have been received. The number of applications for commercial plantations of large size is increasing so rapidly that the usefulness of the practical assistance and advice offered to the tree planters will be limited only by the men and money available for the work. A series of important measurements of the growth of planted groves in the treeless plains has been begun in order to show the value of plantations as business investments. A careful study has been pushed during the year of the encroachment of forests on the Western plains in order to determine the possibility of reclaiming portions of non-agricultural government land by planting forests.

Tree Culture in Connecticut.

A dispatch from New Haven states that the arid and waste lands of Connecticut are to be reclaimed by tree culture. This is but an effort to restore old conditions. The cutting down of Connecticut forests so reduced moisture supplies that the rivers of the state dried up in summer and the factories along their banks were forced to stop for lack of water power. The new law provides for a state park of several hundred acres to be located near New Haven. In this park the Yale School of Forestry will plant all varieties and determine the species best adapted to general transplanting, and it will also study methods of destroying insects that prey upon forest trees. The new law also provides for a forest warden in each town, who will be expected to care for the municipal trees, and towns are urged to make appropriations for the setting out and maintenance of trees. The law also protects shade trees against vandalism. Any person who places an advertisement on a tree is liable to a fine of $60, and a fine of $100 is imposed on any one who wantonly injures a shade tree. If a horse destroys an ornamental tree in a public place his owner is subject to a fine of $100.

Illinois Farmers' Institute Assn.

The Board of Directors of Farmers' Institutes met in regular session at Springfield February 26th. New members had been chosen to represent several of the districts. The members of the present board are:

C. P. Reynolds of the Chicago Drovers Journal, Chicago; B. R. Pierce, Chicago; Merrill K. Sweet, Glenwood; W. M. Manley, Chicago; F. C. Rossiter, Chicago; James Frake, Chicago; J. M. Clark, Chicago; Jacob F. Rehm, Chicago; H. D. Hughes, Antioch; Judson Mason, Elgin; B. F. Wyman, Sycamore; A. F. Moore, Polo; E. M. Cobb, Monmouth; J. H. Coolidge, Galesburg; A. P. Grout, Winchester; S. M. King, Bloomington; E. W. Burroughs, Edwardsville; E. E. Chester, Champaign; L. M. Beal, Mt. Vernon; Edward Grimes, Montgomery; H. G. Easterley, Carbondale; F. C. Goodnow, Marion; Israel Mills, Clay county.

Officers were elected as follows:

President—J. H. Coolidge, Galesburg.

Vice President—H. G. Easterley, Jackson county.

Treasurer—A. P. Grout, Winchester.

Secretary and Superintendent of Institutes—A. J. Bill, Bloomington.

The chief subject of discussion was a national Chautauqua in the interest of agriculture. The suggestion came from Mr. Frank T. Fowler of Chicago, whose idea it was to establish a resort for pleasure and instruction which would be of national interest and importance. Mr. Fowler offered a valuable piece of land of about 1,000 acres in Lake county for the location of such a Chautauqua. A committee consisting of Messrs. Hughes, Frake, Rehm, Reynolds and Sweet was appointed to consider the matter.

Keep Up the Supply of Humus.

E. F. Ladd, of the North Dakota Station, reports experiments and observations which lead to the conclusion "that humus, at least in regions of low annual rainfall, like the Dakotas, plays a more important role in agriculture than has generally been ascribed to it." It may safely be said that this is generally true. Professor Ladd's investigations show that as humus decreases in soils they "become less productive, less retentive of moisture, and inferior in physical quality, while on the other hand it was found that an increase in the percentage of humus is accompanied not only with an increase in percentage of phosphoric acid extracted with the humus, but also with a greater productivity of the soil. * * * As the humus increases it seems to cause portions of the phosphoric acid, till then existing in an insoluble form, to become more readily available as plant food. The same is true as regards the potash, lime and other soil constituents." If more attention were given to maintaining an abundant supply of humus (partially decayed organic matter) in soils, they would be more productive, require less artificial fertilizing, and respond more generously when commercial fertilizers are used.

American-Grown Egyptian Cotton.

Approximately $8,000,000 worth of Egyptian cotton is imported into this country every year, there being a special demand for this cotton on account of its high quality. The Department of Agriculture imported some seed of this cotton several years ago, but more recently larger quantities were obtained and placed where the variety seems likely to succeed. Very encouraging results have been obtained from the work, and this year a bale of Egyptian cotton, grown from imported seed in southern Georgia, was given a thorough spinning test in a mill in Connecticut, and was pronounced equal to the best imported grades. It is believed that we can grow this crop, but aside from this the cottons themselves will be valuable in breeding forms, which in all probability will prove better than

No Apples Scab-Proof.

George P. Clinton, of the Illinois Agricultural College, in an article on apple scab, says: There appears to be no such thing as a scab-proof variety. Various writers have recorded observations showing that certain varieties have been more severely injured than others and there is no doubt that this is the case. It is very likely that such differences are due in large part to the thinner or more easily punctured cuticles of the scabbier varieties. The writer has also observed that scab is a lover of neglected orchards—orchards which have not been properly sprayed, pruned, or cultivated—and that it seems to be less abundant on very young trees, especially where such trees are isolated. This latter is probably due to less favorable conditions for original infection.

Cotton Seed Production.

A report recently issued from the U. S. Census Bureau gives the production of cotton seed in the year 1899-1900 at 4,668,346 tons; of this, 2,479,-386 tons were manufactured, giving a yield of 93,325,729 gallons of oil, valued at $21,390,674, and 884,391 tons of oil cake and meal, valued at $16,030,576. The outturn of cotton-seed hulls from the seed crushed was 1,169,236 tons, valued at $3,189,364, and 57,272,063 pounds of linters, valued at $1,801,231. The total value of all products derived from the portion of the crop crushed was $42,411,835.

"His expression was keen and experienced, yet too self-complacent to be highly intelligent."

BARREN EWES.

An English writer says: It is not uncommon to find a few barren ewes in the flock. Some rams leave more than others. Just before the lambing season commences, any that may be suspected of being barren should be picked out and tested. There are several different ways of detecting barren ewes. The first thing that would naturally strike the eye of the shepherd, or an experienced flockmaster, would be their light walk, flatness of sides, and lightness of belly, as compared with other ewes. Any dirt about the tail is often a sign of barrenness. But none of these indications are to be relied upon in case of the ewe being a late lamber. If these suspected ewes be drawn out and put on a high, banky field, the barren ones will usually be exceedingly active, and will commence butting and skipping. A ewe in lamb rarely skips, however much she may be enticed to join in the fun by a barren one. This skipping is a very sure test. A fine day should be selected, and there are certain fields on every farm, in which they are more likely to reveal the secret than others. The shepherd, as a rule, knows them well. It often happens that they skip when with their own flock, but are more likely to do so when with younger sheep. Another test is to turn the ewe and examine the udder. If barren, she will show no signs of secreting milk, will usually have waxy matter developed in the wrinkled skin around the udder, and the wool will generally be stronger in growth than that on an in-lamb ewe. If these barren ewes are in good condition, or can be got in good condition quickly, it is often advisable to sell them in the fleece.

Pinching In.

A bulletin of the Tennessee Experiment station says: There is a practical application of this law of growth. Pinching is an old practice, employed to maintain symmetrical development in young trees. When a shoot lengthens more rapidly than its fellows the tree is apt to grow one-sided. By pinching out the top of such a shoot its progress is stopped for a time, and the other branches grow on, thus equalizing the parts of the crown. Oftentimes the same branch will require stopping several times before the others overtake it. Every time a shoot is pinched the first effect is to cause buds immediately below to become more mature than would have happened had the branch been uninjured. Pinching, then, not only permits other shoots to overtake the pinched one, but has an important influence upon the future growth of the shoot thus stopped—the operation perfecting the buds below and making them more certain to form branches than they would otherwise. It becomes important to remove or encourage these growth, according to their effect in the symmetry of the crown.

The Young Swine Raiser.

A liking for the business of raising swine is one of the first things necessary to make a successful swine raiser. It is of no use for a man to go into the business if he hates the hog. The interest the man has in his swine is soon seen in the way he cares for them. If he really likes them and cares for their comfort they will be made comfortable, even at a good deal of expense in labor to himself. Pick out our most successful swine-raisers and watch them about their own yards. That tells the story. It would be well if every young man going into the hog raising business could serve an apprenticeship of a few days to the man in his neighborhood that has been raising swine successfully. He might learn gentleness and a few other things that would redound to the interest of the animals to be brought under his care. No matter how much a beginner may know about balanced rations, carbohydrates, proteins and nutrients, he can still learn a good deal of the applied variety of science from any old breeder.

Thomas Slag.

Slag has been used in large quantities in Europe for a number of years. In 1899 1,655,000 tons of slag are stated to have been used in Europe. Of this, 805,000 tons was used in Germany and 170,000 in France. In 1885 the use of this material was practically confined to Germany, and amounted to only 5,000 tons. The total consumption of phosphatic fertilizers in Germany in 1899 was 1,864,000 tons; in France, 245,000 tons—showing that nearly half of the phosphatic fertilizers used in those countries was Thomas slag. Slag has not been extensively introduced into the United States. The larger part of that used in this country is imported from abroad. Some has been manufactured at Pottstown, Pa., and put on the market under the name of "odorless phosphate," and it is expected that the slag will soon be made at Birmingham, Ala., and probably elsewhere in this country in the course of time.

Why Some Feeders Lose Money.

Andrew M. Soule says: Not long ago a gentleman visiting the university farm, and being present when the steers were fed, picked out what he regarded as the three best animals in the bunch. As a matter of fact, these were the three most inferior animals and had made the poorest gains of any. This gentleman was then feeding 100 cattle of his own. It certainly would not be surprising if a man with so little knowledge of animal value as indicated by exterior developments should make a failure of cattle feeding.

A stiff soil, owing to its great retentive power, is not well suited for irrigation.

WRECKED BY WIND

INCALCULABLE DAMAGE TO PROPERTY IN PITTSBURG AND VICINITY.

SEVERAL PEOPLE LIKEKY TO DIE

FORTY PERSONS ARE CAUGHT BY WRECKAGE AND MORE OR LESS HURT.

SCORES OF HOUSES UNROOFED

CHURCH BADLY WRECKED DURING THE EASTER SERVICES.

Pittsburg, April 1. — One of the fiercest windstorms ever known in this section struck the city yesterday just before noon and did almost incalculable damage to property and injured many people, some of whom may die from the effects of their wounds. Scores of houses were unroofed, many trees were blown down, mill stacks toppled over and telegraph and telephone wires generally disabled. The most serious accident was the unroofing of the Knoxville Presbyterian church in Knoxville. The church at the time was filled with an Easter congregation numbering about 600 persons. While the minister was in the midst of his sermon a particularly blew over the large chimney and lifted a portion of the roof of the building. The bricks from the chimney crashed through the roof and carried a huge piece of hardwood ceiling measuring about forty by twenty feet, down upon the worshippers in the pews. An indescribable panic ensued and a frantic rush was made for the doors and windows. At least forty persons were caught by the wreckage and more or less hurt. Of this number five may not recover.

The towboat Belle McGowan was blown over in the Ohio river and completely wrecked. Her crew was rescued. Jones & Laughlins had fourteen had fourteen of their furnace stacks blown down, necessitating the shutdown of a portion of their plants.

Plays Havoc in Many Towns.

As Rev. John Johnson, at McDonald, Pa., was raising his arms to ask the benediction, lightning struck the church spire, went through the roof, which fell, crushing a number of visitors, two of whom will die.

The Noblestown Presbyterian church was also unroofed.

The Forest Oil company had between 200 and 300 derricks blown down in the McDonald region and considerable damage was sustained by its employes.

A freight house was destroyed by fire before an alarm could be turned in either by telegraph or telephone.

Reports from different railways show that all suffered more or less, from broken telegraph poles and crippled service.

Belated reports from near-by towns show that the wind played havoc at every town in its track.

CRUSHED IN THE PULPIT.

Wind Wrecks Part of a Church, Fatally Injuring the Pastor.

Greenville, Pa., April 1. — The Easter services being held in the United Presbyterian church at Jamestown, this county, came to an abrupt ending yesterday. The sky became overcast and a funnel-shaped cloud was seen approaching from the northwest. The congregation became uneasy, but the pastor, Rev. J. M. Jamison continued the services. Suddenly there was a terrific crash and part of the south end to the church crashed in, burying the minister beneath bricks and timbers. The men of the congregation rushed to the pulpit and when the stricken minister was removed from the debris it was found that he had received fatal injuries.

Killed in a Church.

Wellsburg, W. Va., April 1. — The storm which visited the Ohio valley yesterday amounted to a calamity here. The historic Franklin M. E. church, four miles east of this place, is in ruins, its venerable pastor is seriously injured, two members of its congregation are dead and several others wounded. Rev. Mr. Allshouse had reached the peroration in his sermon when suddenly the gable end of the church was blown in. The falling timbers and debris struck him and fell all about him. The congregation was panic-stricken. Many had reached the outside and others were yet in the edifice when the gale lifted the roof off and it fell among the people.

DAMAGE IN MICHIGAN.

Storm Plays Havoc With Telegraph and Telephone Wires.

Grand Rapids, Mich., April 1. — Reports from Lake Michigan cities and towns show that the heavy storm of Saturday night and yesterday has done a large amount of damage, particularly to telegraph and telephone lines. The lines are all down along the lake shore, and Traverse City, Manistee and Ludington are cut off from outside communication. The lake was so rough last night that the Goodrich and Barry line steamers did not venture out. The temperature fell 15 degrees during the day.

Safe Blown Open.

Bazile Mills, Neb., April 1. — The safe of the Bank of Bazile Mills was blown open last night and $1,000 in cash and $700 in drafts stolen. There is no clue to the robbers.

Wrecked by a Hurricane.

Isbell, Ala., April 1. — A hurricane struck Isbell Friday, blowing down houses, churches, fences, trees and everything in its path, doing several thousands of dollars worth of damage. Two churches were totally wrecked.

Burned to a Crisp.

Crown Point, Ind., April 1.—A bolt of lightning during a snow storm yesterday struck the farmhouse of Christopher Larsen, near this city, and set fire to the structure. Mrs. Larsen and daughter were burned to a crisp.

HIS MILLION DISAPPEARED.

John P. Altgeld Penniless When He Died.

Chicago, April 1.—John P. Altgeld died penniless. The reward of his life of achievements was a poverty so bitter that Mrs. Altgeld would be in want to-day did she not possess a trifle of property in her own right. It is represented by the house in which she lives. In the Unity block, which for him held fortune, hope and sentiment, experts do not believe his estate retains an equity of a dollar's value. The million of dollars once rated as the Altgeld wealth is within the walls of the seventeen-story structure. Foreclosure proceedings, begun over two years ago, will reach the appellate court in the fall. The decree already has been entered in a lower court, but it was appealed. If the appellate court reiterates the judgment it is understood that the friends of the former governor will take the steps necessary for the final appeal to the state supreme court. Then, if that tribunal declines to interfere, the building will be sold and the story will be closed.

FLOOD'S AWFUL WORK.

Heavy Loss and Many Deaths Reported in Tennessee.

Nashville, Tenn., April 1. — Reports from the flooded districts of Tennessee emphasize the gravity of the situation. The damage resulting, it is believed, will reach $4,000,000, while twenty-two lives are known to be lost. Certain counties that have surely suffered heavily are yet cut off from communication and the loss in property and life may go higher than these figures. The Louisville & Nashville railroad is running a few trains from here to Lynnville, eighteen miles south of Columbia, while the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis has only succeeded in getting through to Murfreesboro. Neither line can resume regular traffic before Tuesday.

TRIED TRAIN WRECKING.

Boys Enthused by Dime Novel Reading Seek Revenge.

Trenton, Mo., April 1. — George Hughes, aged sixteen years, and George Yound, aged twenty, sons of respectable parents of this city, made an unsuccessful attempt last night to wreck east-bound Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific passenger train No. 12 about five miles east of here by placing ties on the track. The track at this point is on a high embankment and a derailment could scarcely have occurred without the loss of many lives. Both boys were arrested and confessed. Their motive appears to have been revenge for having been put off a freight train. Dime novels are also believed to have played a part.

DIED EN ROUTE HOME.

Five People on Transport Kilpatrick Do Not Live to See Land.

San Francisco, April 1. — The transport Kilpatrick arrived yesterday from Manila with the Seventeenth infantry and discharged soldiers, nearly 1,000 in number. There were five deaths on the voyage. Shortly after leaving Manila Mrs. B. F. Pope, widow of Lieut. B. F. Pope, died. Mrs. Pope was bringing the remains of her husband home. The other deaths were V. Thompson, corporal, Company D, Forty-first infantry; Wilburt L. Leake, private, Twenty-second infantry; Private M. Stuart, Twenty-fourth infantry, and J. J. B. Riley, a civilian.

BOY CHARGED WITH MURDER.

Companion Called Him a Name and He Killed Him.

Toledo, Ohio, April 1.—Danny Rosenbecker, thirteen years old, was arrested yesterday for the murder of seven-year-old Arthur Shanteau. Rosenbecker says that while he and Shanteau were hunting crawfish the latter called him a name and attempted to strike him with a club, whereupon he retaliated by striking Shanteau with a butcherknife until he was dead. He then dragged the body among some weeds, where it was found by a party of searchers. Rosenbecker apparently doesn't realize the enormity of his crime.

WORK UNTIL MORNING.

French Parliament Holds an All-Night Session.

Paris, April 1.—Both the chamber of deputies and the senate sat all night last night to adjust budget differences. The senate at 3 o'clock this morning adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon. The chamber of deputies finally agreed to all the amendments made by the senate and passed the whole budget by a vote of 367 to 80. It adjourned at 5 o'clock this morning. At this afternoon's meeting of the senate the formal elections were fixed for April 27. The chamber of deputies and the senate will reassemble June 1 and June 3, respectively.

WHEAT CROP IN KANSAS.

Yield Will Be Very Large, It Is Predicted.

Topeka, Kan., April 1. — Reports from nearly all the counties in the wheat belt say that the wheat crop in Kansas this year is in good condition and that the yield will be very large. The weather for the past three weeks has been especially favorable to wheat, and as the cold did not injure the product nearly so much as was reported, there is no more occasion for alarm as to the outcome for the year's yield.

WAR FIELD A GOLF LINKS.

Historic Portugal Site Is Now Ground for Sport.

Busaco, Portugal, April 1. — The historic battlefield here where the Duke of Wellington (Sept. 27, 1810) repulsed the French army commanded by Marshal Massena, has been turned into golf links for the benefit of the visitors. The first match took place Saturday.

Treaty of Friendship.

Madrid, April 1. — The treaty of friendship between the United States and Spain will be signed as soon as Bellamy Storer, the United States minister here, returns to Madrid from his trip to the United States.

Foul Play Suspected.

FLEE FROM FIRE

MATINEE AUDIENCE DRIVEN FROM A THEATER IN A HURRY.

PROMPTNESS AVERTS A PANIC

BUILDING TAKES FIRE WHILE THE THEATER IS PACKED WITH PEOPLE.

EASTER HEADGEAR SACRIFICED

WOMEN DO NOT WAIT TO GET THEIR EASTER HATS AND WRAPS.

Cincinnati, April 1. — The Pike building, on Fourth, between Vine and Walnut streets, in which the Pike opera house is located, was partially destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. Standing room had been taken at the matinee which was proceeding when the flames broke out. The audience retired in good order, but some women fainted after reaching the street.

The auditorium is on the second floor, with two stairways leading to Fourth street. There is also a stairway from the stage leading to Backer alley in the rear. About 2,000 persons were at the matinee, and the performance of "Sag Harbor" by the Pike Stock company, with Miss Collier and Byron Douglass in the leading roles, had proceeded only ten minutes when the portiers between the corridors and the north aisle

Caught Fire.

The prompt efforts of Manager D. H. Hunt and his staff and those on the stage were most successful in averting a panic. The fire started from some unknown cause in the basement store room of the Adams Express company, and extended up through the first floors of the Adams express office and Joffee's grocery to the auditorium. The only thing burned in the auditorium was the portiere, but the volume of smoke indicated a serious fire under the audience. The auditorium was so badly damaged from water that it will not be used any more this season. The Pike stock company lost $10,000 in scenery that was stored in the lower part of the building.

A great portion of the women in the audience fled without their new Easter hats and wraps, and the individual losses will be considerable. The loss on building and contents is placed at $75,000.

VESSEL CUT IN TWO.

Serious Collision in Which Three Men Are Drowned.

Philadelphia, April 1. — With the greater part of her crew of eleven men asleep in their bunks below deck, the little fishing schooner Edna Earl, bound from the sea, was run into and sunk in Delaware bay, off Roody island, Del., late Saturday night and three of her crew were drowned. The vessel that sunk the fisherman was the Norwegian steamship Romsdel, from New York for Philadelphia, in ballast, which rescued the surviving members of the crew and brought them to this city. To whom the responsibility for the collision is chargeable has not been determined. Both Capt. Hirsch of the Romsdal and Capt. Kote of the schooner say that all their lights were burning and that they were completely within maritime regulations. The sleeping fishermen were awakened by a crash and rushed up the narrow companionway. All but three of the men managed to reach the deck, Nolen, Smith and Ford being caught by the rush of water and were drowned in the vessel. The blow struck by the Romsdal was so severe that the little schooner was almost cut in half and she sank in less than five minutes.

IS PERSONA NON GRATA.

Mr. Dickinson No Longer Representative to Bulgaria.

Washington, April 1. — As one result of his activities in the Stone case, Mr. Dickinson has lost his position as diplomatic representative to Bulgaria. When he was in Sofia last fall he addressed some very strong representations to the Bulgarian minister for foreign affairs, and apparently he has not been forgiven, for now information comes to hand that he is persona non grata. A minister or diplomatic agent cannot be retained at this place against the will of the country to which he is accredited, and that is Mr. Dickinson's position.

QUITS BENCH IN PRISON.

Judge Wood of Alaska Saves Trouble of Removal.

Washington, April 1. — Joseph K. Wood, United States attorney for the Second district of Alaska, has resigned. Wood is serving a term in prison for contempt of court in connection with the Judge Noyes case. The department was about to take action in his case when his resignation was received.

IN NO GREAT HURRY.

May Yohe and Capt. Strong Proceeding Leisurely to America.

Yokohama, April 1. — Among the passengers of the German mail steamer Klautschou, which sailed for America March 8, were May Yohe (Lady Francis Hope) and Capt. Putnam Bradle Strong of New York. Capt. Strong stated that he would proceed leisurely, but he must be in New York by May at the latest.

Accused of Poisoning Spring.

Big Timber, Mont., April 1. — John Willis is under arrest, accused of attempting a wholesale poisoning of several families with arsenic. He is a rancher near Nye, and is said to have tied a bag of arsenic in a spring.

Killed by Switch Engine.

Winona, Minn., April 1. — John Johnson of Tomah, Wis., aged seventy, was killed by a Milwaukee switch engine at Dresbach. He had just got off the passenger train and was walking down the track when killed

FOUR KILLED IN FEUDAL BATTLE.

Two Officers Die in Effort to Capture Ephraim Hatfield, but Slay Two of Kentucky Clan.

Mattewan, W. Va., April 1. — Four men, two of them members of the famous Hatfield family of feudists, one a detective inspired by the desire to avenge the murder of two brothers and a cousin by arresting one of the Hatfields, the other a volunteer who was assisting the detective, were killed in a battle in the cabin of Thompson Hatfield. While the detective, his deputy, and the two Hatfields were fighting for life in a small room a little girl, the daughter of one of the Hatfields, rushed into the room with a double-barreled shotgun and emptied both barrels into the detective, who was already fatally wounded, blowing his head off. The scene of the battle was on Blackberry creek, in Pike county, across Tug river from here, in the heart of the wild country which has been the battleground of the Hatfields and McCoys for years.

SHIP HARD AND FAST.

Anchor Fails to Hold and as a Result the Hull May Be Pierced by a Boulder.

St. Johns, N. B., April 1— The steamship Lake Superior, Capt. Thompson, arrived from Liverpool with 1,400 steerage passengers yesterday about 5 o'clock and when being moored in, the harbor went ashore near the Round Reef and is hard and fast.

The vessel was in charge of Pilot Bart Rogers, who gave orders to drop the starboard anchor. There being a strong freshet running in the harbor and the tide on the ebb, the anchor failed to hold the ship. The tide was setting toward the reef hard.

Two tugs were alongside of the vessel but they failed to get the tow line in time to save the vessel from going ashore. She now lies on a mussel bed.

When the steamer struck she listed to starboard, but since she has listed to port.

It is thought that a sharp boulder will pierce her bottom when the tide ebbs. An effort will be made early to-day to float the vessel. All the passengers were landed safely.

WILL RENOUNCE AMERICA.

Millionaire Who Had to Pay $50,000 to His Divorced Wife Is Kicking on "Justice."

Patchogue, L. I., April 1.—Asserting that justice cannot be obtained from the courts in this country, Charles W. Lynde of Blue Point, L. I., has declared his intention of converting all his porperty in this country into English gold, renouncing his allegiance to the United States and of going to County Kent, Eng., the home of his forefathers, and there establishing himself and his family as British subjects.

Mr. Lynde's wealth is estimated at $1,000,000. His aversion to American institutions, the courts in particular, it is said, is the outcome of experiences in divorce litigation with his first wife, in which he was finally compelled to pay her $50,000 in settlement. Her maiden name was Mary Wright Yard of Trenton, N. J., and she carried the litigation through the New York and New Jersey courts and finally into the United States supreme court.

DIES OF HUNGER.

Body of Nebraska Man, Who Disappeared Two Years Ago, Found by Hunters.

Gillette, Wyo., April 1. — The body of B. F. Hawkins of Guide Rock, Neb., who disappeared suddenly two years ago, was found by hunters beneath a rude shelter of bark and logs near Peck's ranch, thirty miles north of here. Hawkins was last seen when he started for Spokane, Wash. In his pockets was found $46 in currency and silver, and a note saying: "I died here of starvation and cold. Have wife and nine children near Oketa, Kan."

HAS HAD ENOUGH

FILIPINO WHO SPENT MONEY IN THE CAUSE WANTS TO QUIT.

SAYS HE IS TIRED OF REBELLION

THIRTY THOUSAND USED IN TRYING TO INCITE PEOPLE OF MINDANAO.

A CRISIS IN THE CURRENCY

THE IMMEDIATE INTRODUCTION OF AMERICAN CURRENCY IS URGED.

Manila, April 1. — Rufino, who spent $30,000 in his efforts to incite rebellion in the Province of Misamis, Island of Mindanao, now declares he is tired of rebellion and has offered to surrender, with seventy-five rifles, to the native constabulary. Gen. Chaffee will leave Manila April 10 on a tour of inspection to the Island of Samar. He will visit every port in the island and will witness the surrender there April 11 of the insurgent general, Guevarra. After this surrender the American garrisons in Samar will be greatly reduced.

Crisis in Currency.

The depreciation in the ratio between American gold and Mexican silver, which is fixed officially for the next quarter at $2.27, causes the Americans here to believe a crisis is approaching in the matter of currency. The press unanimously condemns the scheme of Charles A. Conant, the special coinage commissioner, and urges the immediate introduction of American currency as the sole means of saving the situation.

The defence of Maj. Waller in the court-martial proceedings is going along in a routine manner. Numerous witnesses have testified to the treachery of the natives. Cross-examination brought out the fact that Private Davis exercised what was practically absolute power of life and death, he selecting the bad natives from the good for execution.

The cholera returns show that thus far there have been eighty-five cases and sixty-six deaths from the disease. The epidemic here is rapidly decreasing. The provinces, however, report widely scattered cases of suspects.

MESSAGES BY WATER.

Wireless Receiving Pole Trails in the Sea, but Messages Are Received.

New York, April 1.—The Cunarder Umbria, in to-day from Liverpool and Queenstown, had a wireless chat with the outward bound North German Lloyd liner Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse on Thursday and on Saturday evening east of Nantucket received from the Cunarder Campania, bound east, eight messages for friends of her passengers in America.

The bamboo pole to which the Umbria's wires are attached was carried away and fell overboard, trailing astern. That didn't affect the sending or receiving of messages between the ships, each invisible from the deck of the other. Operator Brooker said this showed that the messages travel by water also.

IMMENSE LAKE HAS FORMED.

Result of the Recent Flood in North Dakota.

Bismarck, N. D., April 1.—Although a lake of water of great depth still covers the track of the railroad at McKenzie, passengers, mail and baggage are transferred by wagons to a neck of the temporary lake, about a mile and a half north of the tracks, and there ferried across with a gasoline launch and small rowboats. The water over the tracks fell eight inches yesterday, but there is still several feet of water rushing over the tracks. Arrangements are being made to build a temporary track around the submerged section of country, as traffic over the present track may be delayed an indefinite length of time. An immense amount of freight is accumulating at both sides of the washout, which must soon be moved or great loss will be entailed upon the railroad company, in addition to that already occasioned by the delay in traffic. Passengers report the lake thirty miles long by two miles wide and sixteen feet deep in the middle of the lake. It is estimated that three miles of new track and a 600-foot bridge must be built before trains can run again.

WINNIPEG ASKS MUCH.

North Dakota Baseball Schedule Is Not Completed.

Fargo, N. D., April 1. — The circuit and schedule of the North Dakota baseball league is expected to be definitely determined at a meeting to be held Tuesday at Grand Forks. The trouble has been over the admission of Winnipeg on the terms suggested by the Manitoba city. The Winnipegers want the teams to play in each town on a guarantee, the home team to pocket all receipts above that. This is all right from a Winnipeg view, but some of the smaller towns do not like the idea and insist on a percentage deal, especially as the railroad fare to Winnipeg will be almost five times as much as for the towns in North Dakota. If some arrangement can be made by which Winnipeg will guarantee the extra mileage the fixed sum idea will be a more popular one.

WORRIED TO DEATH.

Black Hills Woman a Suicide After Separation From Husband.

Central City, S. D., April 1. — Mrs. George Kennedy, wife of an employe of the Homestake company, committed suicide by taking laudanum in the Shannon hotel here. Her dead body was discovered by a chambermaid at the hotel several hours after death had taken place. The woman was lying on the bed, and the maid at first thought she was sleeping soundly. The act is thought to have been prompted by worry over the recent separation from her husband.

Blanchard of Mitchell.

FEAR MORMONISM

CHURCH AND STATE IS THREATENED BY THE CHURCH'S SYSTEM.

NOTE OF ALARM IS SOUNDED

MISSIONARY SOCIETIES UNITE IN AN APPEAL TO CHRISTIANS.

TO RESIST ENCROACHMENTS

CIVIL POWER THE AIM AND AMBITION OF THE MORMONS.

New York, March 29. — The alarm sounded yesterday concerning the progress of Mormonism was based on the remarkable statement printed below. It was prepared by secretaries of co-missionary societies of Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal North and South, Reformed, Cumberland Presbyterian, Disciple of Christ and United Brethren churches, who write in an appeal to the Christian public of America to resist Mormon encroachments. Here is the full statement.

"As representatives of missionary societies of Christian denominations in the United States, we beg most earnestly to call the attention of the Christian public to the position, work and menace of Mormonism in our country.

Reasons for Appeal.

"We are moved to this statement by the vitality which the Mormon system has shown, not only in Western states and territories, but generally throughout the country. We are persuaded that Christian people have no adequate conception of that vitality, nor of the methods, seductive and often successful by which the hateful system is being pressed upon the public attention.

"Whatever modifications public sentiments or government action may have forced upon the Mormon attitude and Mormon practices, it has not essentially changed its character since the days of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young. Its priestly oligarchy threatens free government, its grasping priestcraft invades property rights; its varied vices are destructive of good morals, while its pagan doctrines are antagonistic to

The Gospel of Christ.

"The ambition of Mormons, which they don't even conceal, is to secure control of state after state, until, by means of the balance of power, they may make national legislation against Mormonism impossible.

"Toward this end they are moving by an organization as compact and skilfully devised for its purpose as any that ever engaged the activities of man. Their approaches to people are made the more seductive as their appeal affects to be based upon commonly accepted Bible truths. Only after entrance has been gained and the door closed against retreat is the awful system gradually unveiled to its converts.

"It is rapidly growing. The Mormon hierarchy has an unyielding grip on the machinery of the state of Utah and upon all its political and educational interests. Though often denied, there is no doubt that its practice of polygamy continues in defiance of all the promises made to the United States when Statehood Was Granted.

"Its power in contiguous states and territories is increasing at an alarming rate. By means of colonization it has so affected the states of Idaho, Wyoming, Montana and Nevada and the territories of New Mexico and Arizona that it will soon secure, if it has not already secured, practical political control in all that region.

"Its missionary activity throughout the union is almost incredible. It claims to have now 2,000 missionaries in the field—1,400 of them in the Southern states—and to have made last year 20,000 converts. Mormons are also establishing missions in foreign countries on a large scale. At a conference recently held in Berlin and presided over by Hugh Cannon, son of George Q. Cannon, 125 Mormon missionaries were present, who were working in

The German Empire.

They reported 2,000 converts. In Norway and Sweden Mormons have for many years been gaining a continuously increasing number of converts.

"For these and many other reasons we make our appeal to the public. We urge upon pastors and teachers to unveil to their people and pupils the system, so seductive and dangerous to all the best interests of every community of our country.

"We urge upon the public press the duty of educating the public conscience by unsparingly giving the facts of the nature and the work of Mormonism, and we appeal to Christian and patriotic people everywhere to resist, wherever it appears, a system hostile at once to our free institutions and our Christian faith."

HANNA NOT A CANDIDATE.

Senator Makes Explicit Announcement in a Letter.

Tomah, Wis., March 29—Senator Marcus A. Hanna has written a letter to C. W. Croty of this city, stating that he is in no sense a candidate for the presidency in 1904 and requesting his friends to discourage any movement to that end.

Mr. Croty wrote to the senator some days ago and yesterday received the following autograph reply:

"United States Senate, Washington, D. C., March 22.—Mr. C. W. Croty, Tomah, Wis.—My Dear Sir: I have just received your letter of the 19th instant and wish to assure you of my thorough appreciation of the high compliment paid me in your suggestion in reference to the nomination for 1904.

"I am grateful for such friendship and confidence, but will say in reply that I am in no sense a candidate and trust my friends will discourage any movement looking toward that end.

"Thanking you for your courtesy I remain truly yours, —M. A. Hanna."

Catch 'Em Coming and Going.

TRAINS SKIRT FLOOD.

Tracks at McKenzie, N. D., Are Under Ten Feet of Water, With More Coming.

Bismarck, N. D., March 29. — The Northern Pacific road is still blockaded by inundation of tracks for a distance of two miles at McKenzie, fifteen miles east of here, and no trains have crossed in either direction since Monday. All trains are now being returned east and west and sent over the Great Northern road, as there is no indication of a subsidence of the flood. Water has risen steadily for forty-eight hours, until now it stands six to ten feet across McKenzie slough, through which the tracks pass. All creeks and water courses are swollen from melting snows and dozens of bridges have been washed out. Travel is nearly impossible, either by road or rail, through this section.

Jamestown—The great rain storm early in the week has caused the James river to overflow its banks. All ponds and lakes are overflowed. The roads are impassable. The farmers cannot get to the city to trade and there are no through trains from the West, and two trains loaded with passengers were taken back to Fargo to run through to the coast on the Great Northern line.

FLOODS IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mountains of Snow Melting and Freshets Carrying All Before Them.

Winnipeg, March 29.—Reports from various points in the Northwest show disastrous and general floods. Great hills of snow caused by the recent blizzard have melted and the incessant rains of three days have swollen all the rivers, some of which have overflowed their banks, carrying away bridges, killing cattle and stalling trains.

BIG SAW MILL GONE.

Mill of the Gleawood Lumber Company at Cass Lake Burned.

Cass Lake, Minn., March 29. — Fire yesterday morning entirely destroyed the large saw mill owned by the Glenwood Lumber company, causing a loss of $60,000, and throws 300 men out of employment. Ten minutes after the fire was first discovered the whole mill was a vast sheet of flame. By great work of the fire department and employes of the mill, the fire was kept from spreading to the lumber yards and planing mills of the Scanlon-Gipson Lumber company. Owing to the great distance of the mill from the hydrant the firemen were unable to reach the fire with water.

MERGER BILL VETOED.

Gov. Cummins Kills Burlington Railroad Scheme.

Des Moines, March 29. — Gov. Cummins yesterday announced his veto of the Molesby bill, better known as the "merger measure." The bill removes the limit of indebtedness per mile that may be contracted by railroads running through Iowa. It is persistently contended by the opponents of the bill that it was introduced by, and pushed through by, the Burlington railway's lobbyists for the purpose of enabling that corporation to take over the Northern Securities company's stock in case the latter loses its case in the federal courts.

Tollefson was arrested Wednesday evening and broke down and made a statement implicating Martin Peterson, Gus Bjordan, Abel Christianson, Ole Thompson and Andy Lund, all living in or near Cambridge. They were frightened from the bank by a dog. The sheriff has gone to Cambridge to arrest the other five.

BRIBERY CHARGED

CORRUPT USE OF MONEY IN THE SALE OF THE DANISH WEST INDIES.

HOUSE WILL PROBE THE SCANDAL

CONGRESSMAN RICHARDSON LETS GO A SENSATION IN THE HOUSE.

STATEMENT OF A DANISH AGENT

HALF A MILLION USED TO INFLUENCE THE UNITED STATES.

Washington, March 29. — Chairman sensation was caused in the house yesterday by the presentation by Mr. Richardson of Tennessee, the Democratic leader, of charges alleging the corrupt use of a fund of $500,000 in connection with the sale of the Danish West Indies. The charges are contained in an alleged secret report of Capt. Walter Christmas to the Danish government which declared that he had employed corrupt measures to bring the negotiations for the sale of the islands to a consummation. The report, extracts from which Mr. Richardson read, mentioned the name of Abner McKinley and his partner, Col. Brown, C. W. Knox, who was described as an intimate friend of Senator Hanna, Richard P. Evans, who was said to represent Mr. Gardner and his friends in the house, and two press associations, the names of which were not given, as having been interested in the matter.

The charges against members of congress were not specific. Upon the basis of this report Mr. Richardson asked the adoption of a resolution for the appointment of an investigating committee of seven. The speaker ruled that the matter was privileged after Mr. Richardson had amended his resolution so as to specifically include members of the house.

Great Excitement

attended the whole proceeding. Mr. Cannon of Illinois insisted that Mr. Richardson's presentation was fragmentary and that the whole matter should go over until to-day in order that members might read the documents presented, which included newspaper extracts, affidavits, etc., in the record. Christmas, he declared, on his own statement, was a briber and worse. But the house voted down the motion to postpone and the resolution, after being amended in minor particulars, was adopted. The speaker immediately appointed the following committee to make the investigation:

Messrs. Dalzell (Rep., Pa.), Hitt (Rep., Ill.), Cousins (Rep., Iowa), McCall (Rep., Mass.), Richardson (Dem., Tenn.), Dinsmore (Dem., Ark.), Cowherd (Dem., Mo.).

The army appropriation bill was subsequently passed without material amendment and a rule was adopted to make the bill to retire officers of the revenue cutter service a continuing order until disposed of, the order not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills or conference reports.

In the Senate.

In the senate yesterday Mr. Harris of Kansas and Mr. Quarles of Wisconsin spoke at length on the oleomargarine bill. Mr. Harris supported the measure, but urged that an amendment which he proposed placing a tax of 10 cents a pound on adulterated butter and regulating the manufacture and sale of renovated butter ought to be adopted. Mr. Quarles vigorously denounced the oleomargarine industry as at present conducted, as a fraud.

Taking advantage of the latitude of debate afforded by the senate rules, Mr. Patterson of Colorado sharply criticised the methods by which Gen. Funston captured Aguinaldo, and sought to show that Gen. Funston's statement that he had not violated the articles of civilized warfare was not accurate.

WILL TAKE IT UP AT ONCE.

Committee Will Prepare for the Investigation.

Washington, March 29.—Representative Dalzell, chairman of the special committee appointed yesterday by Speaker Henderson to investigate the charges in the Danish West Indian transaction, says he will go over the allegations to-day when they appear in the Congressional Record, and arrangements will then be made for an early meeting of the committee, probably on Saturday. Until then, he said there would be no plans as to the conduct of the investigation.

STANDS UP FOR TSILKA.

Miss Stone Says His Arrest for Complicity in Abduction Is Absurd.

Vienna, March 29. — Miss Ellen M. Stone, the American missionary, passed through Vienna last night on her way to London. Miss Stone appeared to have recovered from the effects of her captivity better than was expected by those who saw her at the time of her release. She said to a representative of the Associated Press: "I have daily become better since I was liberated. This I owe mainly to the fact that for many years I have been accustomed to the air and food of the locality where I was a prisoner. The brigands treated me and Mme. Tsilka as well as they could. They told us it was to their interest to keep us in as good health as possible, as nobody would pay ransom for us if we were dead. Indeed, they did the best they could. My companion, Mme. Tsilka, bore all the hardships bravely. I can only say the best about her, as well as about her husband, whose reported arrest for complicity in our abduction is quite absurd."

KING WASHES THEIR FEET.

Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria Observes Old Custom.

Vienna, March 29.—Emperor Francis Joseph yesterday morning (Maundy Thursday) performed at Hofburg the traditional ceremony of washing the feet of twelve aged men. The nobility and the diplomatic corps, including United States Minister Robert S. McCormick, Chandler Hale, the secretary of the United States legation; Capt. Floy Harris, military attache, and Mrs. Harris, witnessed the ceremony, after which his majesty hung bags of money on the necks of the participants, whose aggregate age is 1,070 years. The old men wore ancient Dutch costumes. The ages of twelve women aggregated 1,182 years, they also received Maundy gifts.

The other members are quartered in a private house, where they are allowed considerable liberty. They will probably remain here several days.

BAD FOR BULLER.

Mistake Made in Bringing Up the Spion Kop Affair Again.

London, March 29. — Gen. Buller has exhausted the patience of his most loyal friends. Comment among military men and in the press runs heavily against him for reverting to the Spion kop affair in his correspondence with Mr. Balfour. Henry Norman has managed to bring out so many lively controversies in parliament that the old stagers are solemnly discussing whether experienced journalists with a fatal instinct for news ought to be eligible to election to the house.

MANY VICTIMS AT MANILA.

Thirty-Nine Deaths Occur From Cholera Since Outbreak.

Manila, March 29.—The cholera returns show that there have been sixty-three cases and forty-nine deaths since the outbreak. Two thousand persons are comfortably housed at the detention camp. The board of health is engaged in destroying the shacks which occupy several districts of Manila. At the Waller court-martial yesterday a Visayan scout testified that he had overheard a plot between the natives to kill Maj. Waller and Lieut. Williams.

CUT OFF BY A STORM.

Sections of Nebraska and South Dakota Are Isolated.

Lincoln, Neb., March 29. — A letter from Chadron, Neb., under date of Wednesday, says that town and district west and east for a hundred miles has been practically isolated as a result of the snow and sleet storm of Monday and Tuesday. Telegraph and telephone wires and poles are flat in all directions, and not a message has been received or sent for three days. In the Black Hills two feet of snow fell and trains are partly blocked. Wires are down in Deadwood and that place is nearly cut off from communication with the outside.

BABCOCK WON OVER.

Wisconsin Congressman Will Vote for Payne Resolution.

Washington, March 29.—Representative Babcock of the ways and means committee called at the White House yesterday in response to a request from the president. It was discovered that the committee stands eight to eight, as between the Payne and Tawney Cuban reciprocity propositions and that Mr. Babcock, who has been absent on account of illness, held the deciding vote. JUSTICE TOO SLOW

INCENSED PEOPLE TAKE THE LAW INTO THEIR OWN HANDS.

WOODWARD IS STRUNG UP

SLAYER OF WYOMING SHERIFF IS PUNISHED FOR HIS CRIME.

WAS CONDEMNED TO DEATH

STAY OF EXECUTION WAS GRANTED AND THE PEOPLE WENT WILD.

Casper, Wyo., March 30. — Charles Francis Woodward, the condemned murderer of Sheriff W. C. Ricker of this county, was hanged yesterday morning by twenty-four masked and armed men on the scaffold erected for his legal execution. The men overpowered Sheriff Tubbs, secured the keys, and led the condemned murderer from his cell with as little ceremony as possible. At 1 o'clock there came a loud rap at the sheriff's door, and twenty-four determined men demanded the keys to the jail. On refusing the demand Sheriff Tubbs was seized and bound and the keys secured. After this there was no resistance to the lynchers. They soon secured the prisoner and led him to the scaffold erected in the jail yard on which Woodward was to have hanged yesterday but for the intervention of a respite granted by the supreme court. A rope was quickly fastened to a beam and a noose placed about Woodward's neck. While this was being done Woodward talked rapidly. His words were partly incoherent, but this was gathered from his talk:

"Boys, let me kneel and pray for you. Tell my little wife I love her dearly.

God Forgive Me

for my sins. I pray for myself, for you, and for Charlie Ricker. I never had a grudge against him in God's world. I never meant to shoot him. For God's sake, boys, don't choke me to death. Have mercy on me and my dear little wife. You are choking me to death—Oh——"

Then somebody gave the condemned man a push, forcing him onto the trap, and the rope began to tighten. Woodward gave a leap before the trap could be sprung, hanging himself. One of the lynchers pinned to the dead man's clothing a card bearing the following words:

"Process of law is a little too slow, so this is the road you will have to go. Murderers and thieves, beware — people's verdict."

Early yesterday morning Sheriff Tubbs took the body down and removed it to the city hall, where the rope was cut from the neck. It was then turned over to the coroner.

Woodward killed the sheriff while, with other escaped convicts, he was resisting arrest by a posse, and narrowly escaped lynching when first recaptured.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XXIII. (Continued.)

Even then he avoided her and ran again to the window; ran back from it, crying, feebly, that he dared not jump. Even as Ursula Sewell stretched out her arms to him the floor beneath their feet gave way; he staggered towards her, and she caught him as he fell. They plunged together, locked in that last embrace, down through the roaring furnace, the whole depth of the house.

Rickeby's Folly burned high that night, and burned well. For, while the firemen were vainly endeavoring to beat down and beat out the flames in that long-deserted house, the fire had shot through the passage which connected the two and had roared up inside the other one. This was discovered only when it was too late; before anyone was fully aware of the fact the two houses were blazing side by side and lighting up the streets far around them. A huge crowd had gathered around the outer walls of the garden, and the wildest rumors spread about. First, that a murder had been committed in the house, and that the murderer had fired the place to cover his crime. Then, that he had perished in the flames; then, that two people had perished; then, half-a-dozen; and, lastly, one for every room in the two houses combined. But even rumor died away, and was silent at last, with the coming of the gray dawn in the sky. And by that time, Rickerby's Folly—with roofs fallen in and one or two walls down—was merely a heap of smoking ruins, and was Rickerby's Folly no longer.

Mr. Hubbard was the last to leave the place. When he turned, disconsolately, away he was, perhaps, the saddest amateur detective in the whole of London town.

"I'm a-goin' to give up this 'ere business, he muttered to himself, gloomily. "I was on the track of that bloke; I was a-goin' to get me name in the papers—p'r'aps me photo—an' be patted on the back; might even 'ave made my fortune. An' now, just at the last moment, it's all ended in smoke. The man who murdered the other fellow is burn't to death, and I 'aven't a bit of evidence to go on. Them p'lice is such blunderers that, if I was set to diggin' up the body, ten chances to one they'd go an' swear blind I'd murdered 'im an' buried 'im meself! No, I'll 'ave no more to do with it; the detective business ain't in my line. For one thing, I know a bit too much about this 'ere Rickerby's Folly; an' for another, I don't know quite enough; an' between the two I might come to grief. So I'll let it alone."

CHAPTER XXIV.

Jemima Explains Matters.

It took Mr. Reeks a very long time, together with an expenditure of coaxings, threatenings, and even a little shaking, to induce Mrs. Reeks to come to a proper frame of mind to grasp fully the fact that their monetary troubles—for a season, at least—were over, and that there was actually in the house the sum of £500.

For it must be remembered that Mr. Reeks, in the hurry of getting away from that dreadful house, had not thought for a moment of counting the notes, and was quite unaware of the fact that Nugent Leathwood had appropriated a few of them to pay his own expenses. However, the bulk of the money was there, and Mr. Reeks was not likely to find that he had very much to complain of when he actually came to count his strangely-obtained wealth.

After a long interval Mrs. Reeks at last consented to sit up and to turn haggard eyes upon her husband. The little man, for his part, was overjoyed to find the color returning to her face and the wonted stiffness to her figure. But her first words were curious, to say the least of it.

"George Reeks," she said, solemnly, "never mention again in my hearing, anything about your £500, or about Rickerby's Folly, or anybody connected with it. I've had enough of it! I never want to hear another word about it as long as I live. Heaven knows accidents will happen." Here Mrs. Reeks fanned herself vigorously with her handkerchief and seemed to turn pale again, "and I hope an innocent woman won't be judged for them. But say no more about it, George, if you love me."

"But, my love," ventured Mr. Reeks, "surely, nothing serious has happened? You alarm me, my dear."

"I am alarmed myself a little, George," retorted Mrs. Reeks, faintly. "But there, I'll say no more about it; wild horses wouldn't drag a word more out of me. Now, as it's, goodness knows, what time of night, let's go to bed. Have you got these notes put away safely?"

"Buttoned up securely in my pocket," replied Mr. Reeks, in a tone of satisfaction.

"Well, stick to 'em," said Mrs. R. "For, Heaven knows we've been through enough to have earned them three times over."

But they were not destined to sleep in peace that night, even after all the troubles they had gone through. Mr. Reeks, it is true, fell asleep in a few moments, and began to dream, blissfully, of big houses in aristocratic neighborhoods, of coachmen and horses and carriages. But he had one peculiar dream, in which he thought that an impertinent broker's man had, for some unaccountable reason, insisted on making friends with him; had followed him to the aristocratic house and thundered heavily at the aristocratic door-knocker, and, having been admitted, had insisted on digging Mr. Reeks familiarly and facetiously in the ribs. He awoke out of this dream into wakefulness, to find that the knocking was going on at his own street door, and that it was Mrs. Reeks who was punching him in the ribs, in a vain endeavor to wake him up.

"George—George—wake up! There's a most awful knocking and banging going on down below!"

Mr. Reeks rubbed his eyes and sat up in bed. There certainly culd be no doubt about the knocking; it was persistent enough and loud enough to have aroused the whole of Little Pond Street. The first thought in the mind of Mr. Reeks was that Gilbert Rickerby had repented and had come after the £500; while the first thought in the mind of Mrs. Reeks was that someone had come after her. Indeed, that worthy lady, as the knocking continued, groaned aloud and dived under the bed clothes.

"My love, don't be alarmed," murmured Mr. Reeks, sleepily but valiantly. "I will protect you, whatever it is."

"You can't, you can't!" exclaimed Mrs. Reeks, in a smothered voice. "George, you won't let them take me!"

"Never!" exclaimed Mr. Reeks, without in the least knowing what he meant. But he sprang out of bed and went to the window and threw it open. A voice came from the street below.

"Reeks! Come down, come down quickly. Let me in!"

Mr. Reeks swung round against the wall, and regarded Mrs. Reeks with a face of dismay. "My love, it's all over!" he said, in a hollow voice. Mrs. Reeks, who had ventured her head above the bed clothes, gave a suppressed shriek, and dived down again. "It's Gilbert Rickerby—he wants his money back!"

As Mrs. Reeks still remained obstinately out of sight, and as the knocking still continued, Mr. Reeks felt there was nothing for it but to let in this most unwelcome visitor. So he thrust his head out of the window and cried, impatiently, that he would be down in a minute; and proceeded to dress himself, bemoaning all the time the extraordinary fate which made him such a shuttlecock to fortune.

He went down stairs, carrying a light with him, and opened the door, but started back at the sight of the two strange figures who staggered in. First came Gilbert, hatless, panting for breath, with his hair singed and his face blackened with fire and smoke, and after him Olive Mallory, clinging to his arm, also hatless, and without even a cloak over her light dress to shield her from the nigh air. But, wonder of wonders! they came in laughing, as though it was the greatest joke in the world, and as though they were doing all this for the sheer love of it. Gilbert closed the door, and caught the little man by the hand and almost wrung it off.

"Don't look so scared, my friend," he said. "Take us somewhere where there is a fire, and where you can give us something warm and cheerful to drink—and I'll tell you all about it."

"You—you don't happen to want—to want any of that money—do you?" asked Mr. Reeks, the candle in his hand trembling in his anxiety. "Because I—"

"Lord bless the man—certainly not!" exclaimed Gilbert. "I didn't come for that. But this lady and myself have just come out of the most frightful peril—out of the very shadow of death, as it were—and I'm too excited to think of anything else. But I knew you'd take us in and help us; I knew we could depend on you. You shall have everything explained to you."

Mr. George Reeks began to breathe again; with a great sigh of relief, he turned and led the way to the little sitting room; and, in an excess of hospitality, began to pile wood and coals indiscriminately into the grate, and to throw in handfuls of matches—apparently with a frantic desire to set the chimney alight. While he was busily employed at this work the door was opened, and Mrs. Reeks, with a very white, scared face, looked in; assured herself, at that first glimpse, that no danger threatened her own person, and came in slowly. Mr. Reeks, in the great joy which possessed him at the thought that the money was still his, beamed around upon her and explained what had happened—so far, at least, as he knew it.

"My love, a little unexpected party. A little early, perhaps, or late—I don't quite know which; but very welcome, my dear, most welcome. I was just endeavoring to—to warm up things a bit."

Mrs. Reeks, conveying as much dignity into the bow she directed toward the visitors as her dressing-gowned figure could carry, gently thrust her husband aside, and began, with greater skill, to kindle the fire herself. Mr. R., quite oblivious of the fact that he was merely clad in his shirt and trousers—bustled about to fetch a kettle and to get out sundry bottles and and glasses.

"I'm afraid, Mrs. Reeks," began Gilbert, "that this must appear a most unwarrantable intrusion; but I'm sure you'll forgive me when you understand all that has happened—when you understand all that we have been through, and yet how happy we are and how glad that it has happened in no other way." Thereupon, he began to tell them of Nugent's treachery after Reeks had left the house, of his great danger, of Olive's recovery, and their escape together. After that they all began talking at once, Mrs. Reeks explaining how she had brought the girl out of the house and then lost her, and Mr. Reeks chiming in with his account of how he had slipped away with the bank notes, fully persuaded that the business was ended.

While Mrs. Reeks spoke she watched Olive Mallory closely, dreading every moment to hear the girl relate something of the story of the death of Cornelius. But it happily appeared that Olive's mind was completely blank concerning all that happened after her illness; she had awakened, in the best sense of the word, with that prayer of Gilbert's to her to come back to life and to love; all the rest was forgotten. The moment that Mrs. Reeks fully realized this she suddenly covered her fact with her hands and burst into tears.

"Why, my love, what's the matter?" asked Mr. Reeks, looking at her in astonishment. Then, in a whisper to Gilbert and the girl: "You've no idea what a sympathetic nature Mrs. R. has got. Feels a thing like this, I do assure you, as though it had happened to herself."

"Nothing the matter, George," sobbed Mrs. Reeks, half-laughing and half-crying, "only I'm glad to think that it's all ended properly, and that no one is killed—at least—there.—I don't know what I'm talking about. But it's all right, isn't it?"

Mr. Reeks reassured her on this point, and they soon after began to make arrangements for the guests for the short remainder of the night.

Worn out with fatigue and excitement, the two guests slept late the next day; indeed, Mrs. Reeks, tapping softly at their respective doors at intervals during the morning, failed to obtain any response. But they made their appearance at last—Gilbert first; and the morning had, indeed, brought a change so far as they were concerned. Olive Mallory looked something like the bright-faced, happy girl who had come to Rickerby's Folly such a short time before, and who had been through such frightful experiences since; the face of Gilbert Rickerby bore an expression of greater happiness than anyone had probably ever seen on it before.

Mr. George Reeks, for his part, could not do enough to show his gratitude or his friendly feeling towards them both. He hovered about, getting in the way in the most ridiculous fashion, and putting on the table the most absurd and out-of-the-way things in the wildest manner. But he meant well, and they were only too ready to forgive him.

At about 2 o'clock in the afternoon came a fresh surprise; no other than the appearance of Mr. Andrew Taggett and Mrs. Taggett, in a frightful state of excitement. They burst into the house the moment the door was opened, and Mr. Taggett literally hurled himself into the sitting room, where he stopped, started, slapped himself violently on the breast once or twice, and then rushed at Gilbert.

"My friend—my dear friend—you are preserved! Medora, look upon him—he is preserved!" Mr. Taggett wrung the hand of the preserved one again; then settled himself into an attitude for easy speech, glanced around to be sure of his audience, and began:

"Happening to purchase a news sheet this morning, and casting my eyes upon it (I had come to London on business, and the news sheet was one erroneously called an evening paper) I saw, to my horror, that the ancestral home of my friend Rickerby had fallen a prey to what is ordinarily known as the devouring element. Checking the hasty tears which rose to my eyes at the thought of the untimely fate of one so young, I dashed off to the scene of the disaster—perchance in the vain hope that I might find in the smoking ruins some trace of him I had loved and lost in—as it were—boyhood's hour."

"And, not finding me there, you bethought yourself of our mutual friend, Reeks, and came on to him?" broke in Gilbert.

"You anticipate me—but I did. And I may add that, even while I raced, with trembling heart, through the streets in search of you, I entirely reconstructed the first act of my drama; the hero now descends by a lightning conductor from the roof of the&"

"For goodness' sake, Anthony, give the drama a rest!" exclaimed Mrs. Taggett. "If you'll believe me, ladies and gentlemen, we've nearly been run in already on account of Taggett's behavior at the scene of the fire; from the way he talked, I'm not surprised that the policemen thought he had a hand in it. But, oh, I'm so pleased to see you, Mr. Rickerby and the young lady—and to know that you're both safe and sound. Do let us know how it happened!"

So the story had to be told again, amid many exclamations. And then, in the silence which had fallen upon the listeners, Gilbert Rickerby said what was on his mind.

"No words of mine," he said, "looking round upon them all, "can convey to you one tithe of my gratitude to you, or the gratitude of the dear girl who is to be my wife. God knows I never imagined when I came here but a few days ago, all that was to happen—all the bitter struggle, ending in death and disaster, that was to come, in my train. From the moment I stood outside the house where I was born, a very whirlwind of woe sprang up about me and about the place; and we have all been sucked into that whirlwind against our wills. There is only one thing I would like to say, and it is a thing I have talked about already with Miss Mallory."

They all sat silent, looking at him curiously and waiting to hear what he had to say.

"I am a penniless man. The fortune which should have been mine I can never claim. True, it is very probable that the greater part of it has been dissipated long ago; but you must understand that, whatever the fortune was, it belonged to Gilbert Rickergy, and Gilbert Rickerby is no more. I dare not wake the whole miserable business again. I dare not drag from his grave this man, Probyn; I could scarcely prove even who I was or what has happened. Nugent Leathwood has gone; Cornelius Veevers has gone; I haven't a witness in the whole world to speak for me. Besides, even if I had, I dare not call upon them; for, by the greatest irony of all, the man who was murdered in my place lies in the grave in which I buried him, and I have nothing to prove who the murderer was or where he is. All this I have explained to my dear girl here. For my part, I am glad to leave behind a name that has caused me so much trouble and sorrow; let the name of Rickerby die with the unhappy house to which it belonged. We shall start again in another land of which I know, and begin another life."

Mr. Reeks had been fidgeting in his chair for the last few minutes, opening his mouth now and then, as though with the full intention of speaking, and then, evidently, thinking better of it. At last he spoke, with something of a gulp, it is true, but still bravely:

"Mr. Rickerby, I have a sum of money which belongs—belongs to you. I may have thought, in a sort of dream of bliss, that I should see Mrs. Reeks behaving in that haughty manner which becomes her, to a footman in powder, or even to a parlor maid; but it is not to be. The money is yours, Mr. Rickerby; will you kindly take it, before my feelings overcome me?" He held out, as he spoke, the bundle of notes which he had taken from his pocket.

"Not on any account," said Gilbert, with a smile. "I owe you more than that money can ever repay; you've been loyal to me, Mr. Reeks, and have helped me when I was helpless myself. Don't worry about the money; Miss Mallory and I will be able to make a brave fight of it—a braver fight than I have ever made alone. In that new world I shall be the better for being without riches—the better for having to make a fight of it."

Just at this moment the small servant maid thrust in her head at the door and announced that Mr. Rickerby was wanted. Gilbert started to his feet in some astonishment, when the door was pushed open, and there stood in the entry, as calmly as ever, and with as little appearance of being disturbed or put out in any way, old Jemima Veevers. She dropped a sort of awkward curtsy to everyone in general, and favored Gilbert with a sudden flash out of her dull old eyes. Before anyone could speak or ask a question, she explained her errand.

"I 'av 'ad such a trouble to find you, Master Gilbert," she said. "It's lucky I've been in the 'abit of listenin' so much; that's 'ow I got to 'ear where Mr. Reeks lived, and I guessed you might be 'ere. I've brought the papers." She held out the brown paper parcel which Mr. Reeks had taken away from the house the night before, the parcel which contained the writing case belonging to Gilbert Rickerby.

"Why, where did you find this?" asked Gilbert, taking it from her in astonishment. "I dropped it last night in the room where—"

"In the room where you were knocked down by that Leathwood," she broke in, nodding slowly. "I saw them carry you out, just as I'd seen them carry out the other man; but what could I do? I waited about in the dark, and then slipped back and found these papers lyin' on the desk. I thought, if you was dead the papers might come 'ow bring it 'ome to 'em."

"Good, faithful old woman!" cried Gilbert. "Why, Jemima, you've brought back my fortune to me! These papers relate to property I have in far California—property under another name. When my father turned me out of doors, and I had to fight the world for myself, fortune was good to me, and I made my way in the New World. But I feared that all my deeds and share certificates and what not were gone—that I must start afresh. But now we shall be able to go out with hope in our hearts—with something substantial to begin with."

So it was all settled that very day They learned from Jemima of the disappearance into the burning house of Ursula Sewell and Nugent Leathwood; of how the old woman had stood in the crowd and seen the frantic, terrified face at the upper window; had seen the house collapse like a thing of cards, taking the man and the woman with it. They asked her, with some hesitation, about Cornelius, and Mrs. Reeks gripped her chair and held her breath, while they waited for the answer.

"'E must 'ave stayed be'ind with Mr Leathwood," said the woman, in a low voice. "I know 'e never came out of the 'ouse. I wish I could find it in my 'eart to be sorry."

That was the only thing she ever said about him; she seemed as willing to forget the dreadful old man as the others were.

. . . .

On a certain bright morning in early summer a big liner was getting ready to sail out into the Mersey. Farewells were being said, and hands gripped and eyes looked into eyes. And on the deck of that liner stood a happy man and woman—the woman clinging to the arm of the man; they had once called that man Gilbert Rickerby, but no one would ever call him that again. On the deck beside him stood a big, portly man, with one hand thrust in the breast of his waistcoat, while the other pointed, with a dramatic gesture, towards the river and the far-off sea.

"You are going, my friends, to venture your frail bark—if this excellent shipping company will permit me to refer in such terms to their vessel—upon the great ocean. There is a pathos and a tragedy in it, if we will but think of it—if we will—"

"No, no; the tragedy and the pathos are left behind, Anthony Taggett," said Gilbert, hurriedly. "We have had enough of both; we set sail to-day, my wife and I, to find the joy and the beauty of life that have been denied us so long. We leave behind Rickerby's Folly, together with all other follies and mistakes; and we leave behind Gilbert Rickerby, too."

"You are determined, then, to start under that new name—the name we do not even know?" asked Taggett.

"Quite determined," replied Gilbert, with a smile.

"Lor' bless us, Anthony!" cried Mrs. Taggett, "what does it matter about a name?" The good lady patted him quickly on the arm and smiled. "I'm sure I'd have married you just as quickly if your name had been John Smith!"

"I quite believe you would, my dear Medora," said Mr. Taggett. "The bell is sounding to warn us to make our last farewells. After all, a name does not matter if our friends are happy."

"There is no fear of that," replied Gilbert. "Just as the bright sun is shining over the sea, so the sun is shining over our lives and the clouds have gone. Other clouds may come and darken our sun a little, but not for long. If we remember Gilbert Rickerby at all, if we think of strange happenings and adventures; if in our dreams sometimes there comes back to us the memory of days when we were parted, when danger threatened, and when Gilbert Rickerby was a hunted man in hiding—well, it will only be like the memory of a thing that is done with and almost forgotten—like a tale that is told."

The End.

One Way to Obtain Release.

Senator Dolliver of Iowa tells a good campaign story on himself. He was making speeches in his congressional district when a member of the house had arrived one afternoon at the little town. When he reached the hotel he discovered that the proprietor, an old friend of his, had voluntarily gone to jail rather than pay what he believed to be an unjust and illegal tax. The hotelkeeper soon learned that Dolliver was in town, and thereupon sent this note to the sheriff:

"Dear Mr. Sheriff—Please let me out of jail for two hours to hear my friend Dolliver make a speech."

"The sheriff," says Mr. Dolliver, "was not only an obliging soul, but he was not devoid of humor. He sent an order to the hotelkeeper releasing him from jail for two hours to hear me speak, and then he added: 'The remainder of your punishment is remitted.'"—Washington Star.

The Spice of Life

Humor and Jests That Are Guaranteed to Drive Away Dull Care.

A young minister, who was naturally of a shy disposition, was rather embarrassed at his first marriage ceremony, and unwittingly reversed the usual order of the service, thus making the bridegroom promise to love and obey his blushing bride.

The error passed unnoticed at the time, but shortly after it dawned upon the father of the bride that a mistake had occurred, and he said to the minister:

"I believe, Mr.——, you have made John promise to love and obey my daughter. Ah, well," he said after a pause and with a sly look at his better half, "I suppose it won't matter much; it generally comes to that anyway."

Deferential.

"I—I have come to—to ask for your daughter's hand," stammered the embarrassed youth.

"When do you wish to be married?" snapped her father.

"Whenever you desire," replied the obliging youth.

"I'm a man of few words," snarled the parent.

"Oh, that's all right," replied the suitor.

"What is your income?" growled the father.

"It isn't worth mentioning," answered the suitor, thoughtlessly.

Downing an Orator.

"Our early parents were vegetarians," said the speaker. "They subsisted entirely on vegetables and nuts, and fruits."

The fat man with the double chin stirred uneasily.

"Well," he said, "I guess we'd all be a good deal better off if they had substituted a juicy beefsteak for that consarned apple."

From Boston.

"There," exclaimed the kind old gentleman who had given the 6-year-old Boston girl a cent, "what do you say for that?"

"Permit me," she replied with sarcasm, "to express my sincere gratitude for your most munificent gift. I shall buy the latest edition de luxe of Shakespeare's works with it to add to my library."

Utter Irreverence.

"Remember," said the man of ideals, "that George Washington succeeded brilliantly. And he never told a lie."

"Well," said Senator Sorghum, reflectively, "maybe he never told a lie. And then, again, maybe that is one of these stories a man circulates now and then in order to make a good impression among his constituents."

Both Girls Happy.

"How is your daughter Edith, Mrs. Lakeside?"

"She is well and happy. You know she is to be married on the 20th."

"Indeed. And how is your other daughter, Florence?"

"She is also well and happy. You know she got her divorce on the 10th."

Unkind.

Timkins—I'd get married if I could find a sensible girl.

Simkins—I know a nice girl, but I don't think she wants to marry. At least she refused me.

Timkins—By George, she must be a sensible girl. Introduce me, will you?

Clearly a Fraud.

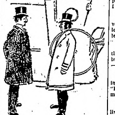
"Mister, can't ye give somthin' to an old soldier that's been campaignin' in the tropics on the other side of the world fur the last two years?"

"Trekking or hiking?"

"I don't understand."

"Get out! You're a humbug!"

Made Money Easily.



"You say Jones made his barrel in a get-rich-quick scheme?"

"Yes; he married old Gotrox's daughter."

Heard in West End.

"Pop, you weigh 200 pounds, don't you?"

"Yes; why do you ask?"

"'Cause t'other day maw said the devil would get you yet, an' I was thinkin' how long it would take you to burn!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Not Particular About the Day.

They were taking a walk together, the small girl and the family friend. In some way the conversation turned upon the subject of birthdays, and the F. F. remembered that she did not know the date of the smart girl's natal day.

"When is your birthday, dear?" she asked, "I must send yo.. a nice little present."

"In June," answered the smart girl, promptly.

"But what day in June?" persisted the Family Friend. That was a puzzler, for the little girl really had not the slightest idea, and to lose a birthday present for a reason like that would be sad. But a bright thought occurring to her, she answered quickly:

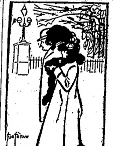
"Oh, any day in June will do."—New York Times.

The Fits.

"But," observed the fool man who had permitted his wife to take him along on her search for a spring bonnet, "the hat doesn't seem to fit. Now, I think a woman's hat should conform to her head the same as a man's."

"Oh," tittered the merry milliner, "there are no fits connected with spring hats. They generally develop in the men when the bill comes home."

Cost So Much.



She—Did your trip to Europe broaden you any?

He—No; it made me short.

Handicapped by a Name.

"I see that Percival J. McIntosh, the Amalgamated leader, is now worth $6,000,000 and yet he started in life with a serious handicap."

"What was that?"

"He was just an office boy."

"He had a worse handicap than that."

"What was it?"

"Folks must have called him Percy."

As He Was Caught.

"Then," said Longbean, concluding a very "fishy" story, "the capture of both the panthers was easy. How do you suppose I caught them?"

"I suppose in the same way that liars are usually caught."

"Er—how's that?"

"By their tales."

Poetry and Groceries.

"John," said the practical little wife to the poet, "couldn't you manage to dash off some love songs between now and breakfast to get us a couple of sacks of flour?"

And then he glared at her and said he wasn't hungry, and didn't like flour anyhow!

Had Arranged for That.

He (planning an elopement)—And at 12 you sneak out of the house and meet me at the corner. I won't have a carriage, as we must be as economical as possible.

She—O, I've made papa promise to pay for the carriage.
